

A Guide to Love and Relationships

Disclaimer: Information presented in this guide is for education and informational purposed only and it is not an advice. Always seek help from licensed professional before making any decision.

Love down through the years has proven to lead toward an untrue type of love, since today respect, consideration and other elements of love are non-existing. When two people join in relationships and love they must adhere to the advice provided to them by the Law of God and not man. When couples step on boundaries and disregard true advice they often find them self-heading down the path to divorce and/or separation, thus, finding true love takes skill, patients, long-suffering, and other human mechanisms to make love last. To find out more about love and relationship, and the different types of love, we encourage you to read on!

Abusive Love Hate Relationships

Abusive relationships have too many variables to mention in one piece, but for the most part, they must be mentioned, since hope is available. Contrary to love and relationships, abusive relationships are built on love and hate.

The victim of an abusive relationship often loves their partner and hopes that someday the person will change, which it never happens. The other component in the relationship has a deep buried hatred and uses the mechanisms that humans require to control his or her mate. The hate is often buried deep and exposes itself when an emotion is touched by the mate. The person will ever strike out in public, attacking another person of the same gender, but it does happen.

The mate showing love to his or her lover often hears “I am sorry, it won’t happen again. I was just mad.” The person with hate buried inside often makes excuses for his or her behavior and the partner often believes the lies throughout the relationship.

Abusive relationships come in many forms. In other words, doctors, lawyers, cops, judges, poor, or other class of people can be the hater while the mate is the lover. The person filled with hate will often use the mate as a punching bag when he or she feels angry. The anger is buried deep, thus the partner can trigger the mate under any circumstance. In other words, a wrong word that is not wrong to someone else could ignite an emotion that strikes out at the target.

Love and hate relationships are the worse kind since someone always gets hurt. Statistics show that every 3 minutes a woman is battered by her mate, thus in some instances killed. The ongoing problem needs a resolve, since lives are at stake, therefore, I am writing this article in hopes they someone will listen and get help now.

A good relationship is based on trust, love, and faith and sharing. When one partner is giving more than the other partner this is not love. When one partner trusts that his or her partner is faithful and the partner is out spreading it around like the plague then someone is going to get hurt.

Nowadays, it is next to impossible to find pure love. Good men often find women that treat them ill, while bad men are mistreating women badly that their views of men diminish over time. Good women often find men that cheat, lie, or take them for granted, thus finding a good relationship nowadays is next to impossible.

Persons in an abusive relationship often remain with their partners regardless of the level abuse, since the hater has their self-esteem and confidence torn down so badly that they believe that no one else wants them. Even if they do have a shred of dignity left, they are often threatened that if they leave the abuser will hurt or kill a family member, friend, or the partner. The law is no help, or offers little help to partners of abusive relationships. Rather, in most states the cops have allowed murder before acting upon the crime. This happens too often, thus the law is not in the favor of the person believing their partner will change, rather they are in no one’s favor but the predator him self. History will backup my every word on this topic, thus I am not holding back any punches.

Thus, if you are in an abusive relationship you may want to consider what love and relationship really means. If you are believing that your mate will change you are wasting valuable time and co-depending him or her in their ungodly behaviors. Love does not hurt, rather love makes a person feel hope, secure, confident, and ready to take chances in life. Love offers hugs, kisses, respect, trust, and a hand when times are hard.

This article is targeted to ladies in general, but men are abused too, thus anyone in an abusive relationship is wise to leave now and find true love and relationships that will last a long time. Bad relationships in love rarely last.

Bad Relationships and Love

Relationships are either built out of stone, or else built on sand, which later falls beneath the broken hearts in the world, and the pattern continues. When a relationship is built on stone the foundation often stands, since love, trust, honesty, communication and other elements that compose a relationship continues throughout the terms of the commitment. On the other hand, the relationships built on sand lack the elements required to make love grow and the relationships stand.

The love and relationships that intend to love their partner as they would love them self, by respecting the partner are good relationships that last. Bad relationships are built on "You trust me, but I decide if I will trust you." Selfishness composes bad relationships, since one or both parties are out for gain, rather than to give and share.

Selfishness is an egotism state of mind where the person feels that some owes him/her something. Rarely do they consider what they owe; rather they believe that the world is forever in debt to him or her. When a person feels the world owes them, they often lack consideration, respect, loyalty, faithfulness, and commitment. The egotistic minds often-base relationships with family, friends and mate on what can I get from you. At the onset of a bad relationship, the joining mate with egotistical thinking will lead the mate on, making him or her believe good intentions come with the partner. In other words, the person leads the mate to believe that he or she has the best interest of the partner and of the relationship in mind. Often this type of relationship will move along fast, since the partner with egotistical thinking strives to prevent the other mate from noticing the real intentions.

These types of relationship are built on sexual interest rather than true love. As the relationship progresses the mate believing that good intentions were intended at the beginning often find out when it is too late the relationship is heading down a dead end road, with only one partner working.

Different relationships in the world boil down to good or bad relationships. When two people join in intimate relations, both parties must work hard to make the relationship work. A bad relationship will utilize tools believing that the mechanisms will keep the spice in his or her life when they feel tired out of the mate. In other words, a bad relationship focuses on sexual gratification, which never occurs, since he or she tires out quickly. The person may engage in pornographic reading or viewing, promiscuous relationships, violence, and so forth to gratify the desire.

The love given by these people are superficial love that focuses on gain. Desire is the seated root of their intention and thus, they will lack the elements that make love work. Few egotistical types change over time, while others become more aggressive and seek harder to gratify their desires. The ultimate desire of these people is to please self, while taking what they can get from others and at the same time manipulating others into believing they are good souls.

If you are searching for love and relationships, the World Wide Net, bars, and other unsafe areas are not the place to search. Some people go to Church hoping to find their soul mate, but even churches pose threats, since true worship is un-existing. Thus, when searching for love and relationship take the wise word of caution, and heed to the voices of the past that tell you, love will come when you are least expecting it to arrive. Thus, you do not look for love; rather love will come to you if you allow room for it to arrive.

Loneliness is one of the key tools that land hungry souls in bad relationships. Bad relationships are neglecting, failure directed, and sometimes abusive. If you are in a relationship and your partner is out for self-gain, thus take warning now, since in most instances failure is the path you will walk. Some self-seeking souls may turn violent, or frequently neglect their mate. The partner will disrespect, and place ongoing doubt in the mind of the partner, until a breakdown occurs, and sometimes the breakdown is by emotion.

Breakdowns in Love and Relationships

Nowadays, there are scores of breakdowns in love and relationships. People join in relationships nowadays with one going one direction and the other the opposite direction. Thus, dreams are an element of relationships that determines if two people will last. If one person intends to move to California to continue a career in engineering and the other person wants to live in the local area they now currently live to continue his or her career, something has to give, or else a breakdown of the relationship is on its way.

One person I befriended lived for the woman that he fell for and started a relationship. The person was successful in his career, yet the woman needed to continue education in another area to start her successful life. Once the woman started college away from her mate, the relationship soon illustrated signs of deterioration, until gradually the two drifted apart. His heart was broken and what followed was confusion of his direction. In other words, when relationship severe breakdowns, often the separated will find it difficult to move on in life, especially if one or the other felt they met their soul mate.

Breakdown in relationships may also stem from adultery, outside relationships when no marriage is involved, abuse, lack of communication, lack of trust, lack of compatibility, and so forth.

When compatible companies join, they often feel they have a lasting relationship. However, scores of people supposedly compatible combusted and separated when they found that their compatible traits collided. On the other hand, incompatible mates have also found it difficult to continue a relationship, while others found that their relationship was the relationship of a lifetime.

Relationships built on trust; honesty and communication often last longer than those that do not. Communication is THE leading element that makes business relationships, intimate relationships, parent/child relationships and all other relationships work productively. If there is no communication, or lack of communication, gradually any relationship will fall apart. Communication leads to trust, honesty, hope, respect, and so forth.

Respect is another element needed to make any relationship work productively. If there is, lack of respect the arrangement is sure to fail. Respect is broader than what many believe. Thus, respect is greeting a person as 'sir' or 'maim.' Nowadays, if you greet someone with the salutation sir or maim you will probably hear, "My name is..."

Respect is also considering persons privacy. In relationships, men and women alike go through their mate's purses, wallets, or other personal possessions, believing they have the right to do so, or else believing that the mate is cheating. This is a disregard to the mate's privacy, thus is a form of disrespect. Unless your mate gives your permission, you do not have the right to nose through their belongings. If you suspect your mate is cheating, rather than invade their privacy and disrespect them, open the chain of communication and speak to your mate respectfully without accusing.

During one relationship, a woman cheated repeatedly on her husband, who was an alcoholic and emotional abuser. The woman had grounds to request a legal separation, instead she choose to adhere to untraditional actions to resolve, or release the pain she felt from the relationship. Of course, she had a history of cheating, lying, stealing, and the list continues, but steal failure in this relationship, including communication. The two separated eventually, but between relationships she lured her x-husband back in tossed him out when she wanted intimacy with her new husband. This became a cat and mouse relationship, where all involved were hurt tremendously, since one is in prison, the other is still drinking, and the woman is running, trying to keep her kids from being taking from the states.

The examples in this article, merely shows you the different types of relationships and should help you to see what it takes to make any relationships work productively. Thus, the different types of relationships fail often because the two neglect the relationship by violating respect, trust, and rarely upholding communication. Commitment is also needed in love and relationships to make any arrangement work.

Commitment in Love and Relationships

Be capable of committing one self is required, since love and relationship is built on commitment. Commitment is a promise. Commitment requires the ability to uphold promises made to another individual. The wedding vows at one time committed two in matrimony, thus committing them to love one another through thick and thin, better or worse, sickness and health, and until death ended their love.

When a person commits to another, they are targeting the person's mentality and emotions when failure occurs, since commitment is a consignment to a disciplinary or mental institution. Thus, joining in marriage or relationships outside of marriage, or even in friendship, commitment is the element that initiates the arrangement.

Once the person's fall together whether words are crossed, the parties are saying by their actions, "I commit myself to you." Although friendships differ than marriages or intimate relationships, still a level of commitment exists. Marriages have obvious commitments; however, failures occur when one or the other fails to adhere to their promise to love until death does them apart. Often, disrespect of one or the other, lack of trust and communication will breakdown a relationship, or commitment.

Looking at examples could help you to see failure in different types of relationships and help you to appreciate the elements required to make a relationship work. One example of a surefire failing relationship is visual in the following illustration.

Two join in a relationship. The woman had a disturbing past, consisting of abuse, neglect and degradation. The man has a disturbing background; however, the severity of the woman's past far exceeds the man. The two share emptiness inside when they meet, with one considering lust and desire while the other is considering love. The woman is beautiful in physical form, thus the man desires her and they join in intimacy. The woman is seeking love, however she finds the man unattractive, yet handy since she feels he can help her escape a nasty relationship in existence. Thus, together they join and later marry since a child is born. The woman disrespects the man since he is obviously an alcoholic, but she fails to see that he also sells and administers drugs. The woman is naïve to drug addicts and seller, thus she continues seeing the man on occasions until the baby is born and finally the two take of residence together.

Finally, marriage is required since the two join a religious group that enforces marriage rather than relationships outside of marriage. The woman thinks, "I will marry this monster," as she rushes out of her workplace to join her mate in marriage. She stops at the liquor store to pick up a bottle of Vodka and rushes home to dress. The two are marrying at the Justice of Peace, and when she arrives, her mind is in a whirl. The night of their marriage the man is too drunk to join her in their honeymoon, thus she becomes angry and storms out of the room. For the next six months, she ponders on annulment, seeking out advice from her friends. The marriage continues. The woman comes to terms that she will do her up most to make the relationship work. Over time, she develops a natural love for her husband and works effortless to please him and make the relationship last with him abandoning the family and drinking every day. Over time, the woman finds that he is selling drugs, administering drugs and soliciting prostitution. She decides she had enough and applies for a divorce, even when doubt lingers in her mind.

The two finally divorce after the man abuses her for applying for a divorce and over time, the two never see each other again. Now, the man loved her. He loved the way she looked, how she performed in the bedroom and how her behaviors worked to make their marriage stand for more than three years. The woman illustrated patience and long-suffering, however commitment was lacking. Therefore, we see a lack of communication, commitment, long-suffering, respect, thrust, loyalty, faithfulness, and so on, thus the relationship was a surefire failure. Controlling love and relationships often fail as well.

Controlling Love in Relationships

Why do people stay with mates that control and dominate them, thus taking a large measure of their freedom in relationships? The obvious answer is that the person lacks self-esteem and confidence and may feel that he or she cannot find love elsewhere. Children often link mates together even if one of the partners is controlling and dominating the other.

Are men mostly domineering and controlling? No. women can be domineering and controlling as well, and I have analyzed two case scenarios where the women in the relationship had full control. One case scenario a woman coming from a background of abuse met her soul mate through friends. The two joined and together they had six children combined. The woman who penalized them with threats if they failed to adhere to her demands controlled all the children and mate.

Although the relationship the man was not permitted to look at women at first, nor was, he allowed watching television programs at leisure. Sure, men in relationships, or else good men will not have wandering eyes, or else engage in activities that cause others harm, such as pornographic materials. Still, he had no room to show her that he had only the best intentions for their relationship. Later throughout the relationship, she showed leniency, but still the woman controlled the home.

Some women are passive yet still control in different methods. While the first woman enforced threats to control the home, another woman used mechanisms of human nature to control her relationships. She was a skilled manipulator and controller, whereas she underestimated the men she had relationships with. The woman was adulterous, manipulator and an outstanding liar if one was not smart to her tricks. Through lies and manipulation, the woman controlled the men she had relationships with, and when the men would not adhere to her demands she would throw temper tantrums, or else become violent.

The woman was a lousy mother, since she showed no regard to her children and used them to control the men she engaged in relationships with. Throughout her history, she had trials of promiscuous behaviors, violent behaviors, and a history of deceit.

While this is a couple of case scenarios of controlling and dominating relationships, men from afar have been in relationships showing controlling and domineering traits far more than women. Not all men are controlling and domineering, but the men that illustrate such behaviors are often violent predatory humans. The men that control or dominate will often use violence, threats, manipulation, lies, and other hasty mechanisms to control the mate. Often these types are unfaithful, and will make up all types of excuses for their unnatural behaviors.

Therefore, when joining in a relationship it is wise to know what you are getting into before you make commitments. Some relationships start out with one partner controlling the other through manipulation and the mate fails to see the signs and realizes what happens when a trail of harm starts and finishes in deeper conditions. Thus, the mate may start out telling the partner what she or he wants to hear to lower the person into the web of control, deceit, and domination. Other times the mate may act as though they are not interested in the mate, especially if the mate is attracted to the person.

Heed warning, since controlling and dominating relationships leave a string of victims throughout the term of the relationship, and sometimes the victim is unable to leave the relationship since the mate may threaten family members, friends, or else the mate. Other times the mate never gets out, since death was the ultimate result of the controlling and dominating relationship.

If a man or woman is controlling you, it is unlikely the person will change. Some people stay in dominating and controlling relationships believing the person will change once the mate shows them love. Other dominating and controlling relationships continue since the partner makes the mate feel like no one else wants them. They often under mind and belittle the partner, until the self-esteem and confidence is zip. If you are in a controlling and dominating relationship, you may want to consider steps of leaving your partner behind. Thus, dirty love and relationships lead to harm.

Dirty Love and Relationship

What is dirty love and relationships? To understand the concept you must first listen to a story that hurt many, which led everyone else to see that dirt, love, relationship and hate filled the trails of the perpetrators, while claiming the hearts of many. When relationships are dirty, outside parties, leads to hurt resulting from the behaviors, actions, thinking, and other components that instigated the harm to enforce desire. From Bonnie and Clyde to various other dirty relationships, we can see how these types of relationships cause harm to others. Bonnie and Clyde had a hate/love that escalated touching the entire world over time, and causing harm to many.

Dirty relationships often hurt everyone involved, and if crime is included, everyone is hurt. In one account of dirty love and relationship, one person left a family shattered, while the mate worked hand in hand to assist the ungodly action carried out by the two. It started in a hasty family oriented relationship, where love was last and lies and hate was first. The hatred inside of the woman grew to the point that she was willing to drop all her human mechanisms, including, love, trust, honesty and so on to go through the channels of causing harm while superficially loving her mate. Vise versa, his love was superficial as well, yet he went to all lengths to fill the desires of this woman that would lead anyone to believe long-suffering love existed.

Throughout the relationship, the two engaged in bi-sexual relations, crime, distortion, mockery, and the list continues. The relationship grew into a criminal state of mind where one party conjured up the action to distribute to the parties in question to hurt others. The harm extended, yet never reached the world as if it will reach the world today.

It started in a dysfunctional relationship. The children were distributed from family to family abused along the way while suffering emotional trauma during the escapade. The perfect crime is reported, but goes unnoticed because no one sees it as a crime, or cares to listen because of the pettiness of the nature. Media will jump in on a Bonnie and Clyde story and the world will enforce the publication, but rarely will you hear a story where love/hate and relationships instigate the ultimate crime while acting out on criminal intent. However, when love and relationships target a specific group of people that has lived and loved through suffering and pain for decades, unless media is involved, no one cares to listen.

Anyway, the two joined to cultivate a scenario that would harm many. One child was adopted out since she was a target of the plan accumulated throughout the relationship. The child was given in birth by a separate party, thus the child held no support to the love in the making, rather merely a disturbance of the plan. The two of them conjured up the plan that included...

The law was involved in this case scenario of love and relationship, since one of the family members attempted to place Missing Report. The person attempting the action was disregarded, but time proved the crime when reports came in that made her aware of what really transpired. Thus, a family was hurt. A family that was already hurt beyond repair, yet still crime, love and relationship played a part in the harm brought about by this relationship.

The women acted out on motive to conjure up the plan that would put her in the Missing Case Files. Later in life, people made reports of seeing this woman in existing in an area where her husband moved. It became apparent that the woman and her husband conjured up the plan that would lead the family to believe she was dead, when in fact she was living well with her family in another town. She went to the extent of having calls placed that she was beheaded and killed living in an un-named gravesite in states un-named in this article. What a cruel, vicious act acted outside of love and in relationship that harmed an entire family. Dirty love and relationships work in one way and that is to hurt others. When down in love and up in relationships we can wonder which direction the couple are heading.

Down in Love and Up in Relationships

Over the course of the years, love has become outdated, since nowadays people join in love while participating in ungodly acts. Love today is based on sex, rather than commitment. Few people are still searching for true love, only after they have slept with countless of people throughout their life, all to find that love never existed.

At what time a person is down on love they often search for relationships, swindling through the list to find that perfect mate. Nowadays, people are joining Love Connections, and other dating systems to find that true love. Few base their idea of true love on the compatible system provided by the services, yet fail to realize that a machine is determining the compatibility level. Thus, at what time the relationship starts the two join in phone conversation and email each other. Sometimes the relationship works, but as the communication continues between the two, one or the other decides this is not for me, especially when another listing comes on the site and the face is much prettier.

Few people join the Chat Rooms searching for love. Some people give up hope when they speak to thousands of people worldwide and never hear what they were waiting to hear. The goal in the chat rooms for the most part is to have sexual communication without meeting the person. Few people have literally met in person all to find them self in a chaotic situation, or else dangerous situation. To give you some insight on love and relationships abroad the Internet, I will narrate a couple of accounts.

One relationship over the Internet started out with coy communication. The couple chatted abroad the Internet for some time, until they reached the point of phone conversations. From here, the two communicated frequently over the phone and Internet lines; until the day came, they decided it was time to meet. The two met, and later married and after one year of the relationship, the woman filed for a divorce. Now the woman had children and was a professional in mental health, yet she failed to see the dangers abroad the Internet. It turned out the man was abusive and neglectful, thus filled her life now of pain and despair.

Another incident of love and relationship over the Internet started when two people began chatting in the Group Chat Rooms. The two decided to talk over the phone and the man lead the woman to believe that he had the best of intentions while searching for love. He narrated the past relationships, briefing her, letting her know that he was hurt from the experiences. The woman wise, stood back, since she knew that stories have two-sides. She talked for months on the phone with the man and later decided to meet with him on her grounds. The two meet, and after one night of communication, relating, and sleep the woman become suspicious when the man began showing controlling behaviors. Thus, the woman sent him packing the next day and blocked him from calling, Aiming or emailing her. The man was blocked of all connections and the woman moved forward with cautious, still waiting for that special someone to love her.

The woman in the last illustration was intelligent to a large degree, since she recognized symptoms the man showed that would lead to abuse. Immediately the woman got rid of a problem that could have escalated to a broken heart and shattered world.

Scores of people abroad the Internet search for love and often the people make mistakes that lead them down on love and up on relationships. In other words, the person will view love as a sexual mechanism and forget its true meaning since hurt controls their mind from the bad relationships of the past. The people will search out the world for relationships searching for sexual gratification.

If you are down on love and up on relationships, then you know that the world is filled with hate, selfishness, inconsideration and the list continues, and rarely is true love available. Therefore, think long and hard before you join in love and relationship. Now we can learn how to enhance our toxic relationship.

ENHANCE YOUR TOXIC RELATIONSHIP-OR GET OUT!

In any relationship, the most significant thing you can do is be honest and gain the trust of your mate. If the relationship is toxic, you might want to find the best solution that works for the both of you, but be honest while doing so. You first need to decide if the toxic relationship is suffering because of your own issues, including behaviors. People change; emotions change and when we get to a point of no return, we can often search inside ourselves to see if the problem in the relationship lies within ourselves.

Relationships are based on trust and understanding one another. If you do not have trust and understanding, more than likely your relationship will turn toxic. This means you and your partner need to find a solution to deal with the problem, or get out. Plain and simple, you cannot have your cake and eat it too.

Laying the foundation in the beginning is the first step to a successful relationship. Foundations based on stability offer a rewarding, long-lasting relationship, while unstable foundations lead to breakups. Therapy is good, but if you can sit down and talk through your own problems this is the best solution and it will save you money. Talking is the mark of eliminating problems, while frustration comes from those who cannot form the skills to communicate.

Incompatibility can lead to breakup, thus weighing out your relationship vigilantly before beginning a relationship can prevent disaster. If you are already involved in a toxic relationship more than likely, you will need to evaluate the compatibilities. You do have the options of working through the incompatibilities or getting out.

Compatibility extends to family history. If you are suffering problems due to family quarrels, the ride gets strenuous. A family tending to like the person their child is with is less likely to give you problems. Toxic relationships are painful when families butt into your business frequently. Many persons who begin relationships and have been with their mate for sometime may find that neither party is compatible. The relationship can still work if the two of you communicate and comprise a plan that both can agree on. Read and learn the steps in good relationships by buying books that offer a good strategy for the incompatible couples.

Many times people commit to relationships with the idea that they can change the other person later. This is not good! Either you like whom you meet, or you do not. No one can change another human being, the person must have the desire to change him or her self, and the first step to change is acceptance and then willingness to make the changes.

One should be skeptical of those who vow to change for you. Often the promises are not met, or the person has "hidden terrors" that could be forced onto you later. If you are a dreamer, you may look at your mate as a fantasy. This is not good either. You lose the benefits by not getting to know the person you have mated with or you wake up from your dream and find that you made a serious mistake.

The chief focus to keep in mind is to communicate, spend quality time, stay focused, and lay a good foundation for your relationship; keep it honest and learn to trust one another, with unselfish motives.

Selfishness has led to various problems, including adultery, murder, fornication, theft, and so forth. Thus, selfish is one of the leading causes of breakups in relationships and marriage.

As you can see, sharing plays a large part in love and relationships. When two people share, they are giving something to the other that leaves a lasting feeling of joy and love. Two people working together without selfishness often build a relationship on solid grounds, and often endure through tribulations, joyous moments, and so forth. Relationships built on solid grounds rarely fall apart when troubles come their way. Thus, enhance your toxic relationship, or get out!

When finding love and relationships skills are essential to find true love and make the relationship work.

Finding Love with Relationships

Mom and dad are in the kitchen roaming about with dad swigging down his last drop of coffee and mom tidying up after the kids have ate and rushed off to school. The two kiss each other as they rush out the door heading off to work. Mom heads one direction, dad goes another direction, and finally they both meet their destination.

At work, the hours go by and tasks are completed, but as mom sits at her desk, her mind begins to wonder. "What do I cook for supper?" she thinks. Her mind continues racing as she recalls the Parent Teachers Conference the following week. Mom now has to find time off work to join the meeting, and hopes that her children are doing well in school. When she arrives home, she cooks, cleans and finds time to relax after a busy schedule. Dad has already hit the couch watching the latest news, while the kids are in their room doing homework.

A common relationship is ongoing, and the next week mom makes the Parent Teacher Conference all to find that her children are failing in school. She thinks, "Have I encouraged my children enough?" Mom begins to blame her self, and when she arrives home anxious to talk with her husband, she finds him absence. Dad had to work late again to meet his deadlines, so she calls the office where dad works and dad is not answering the phone. Later that evening dad comes home. The kids are in bed and mom is sitting aimlessly staring into the space, when dad says, "Hi honey, how was your day?"

Mom frustrated and confused snaps, "How was your day." Dad shoots her a curious look and says, "I am sorry honey, I had to work late again." Mom shots back with a hint of anger, "Why didn't you answer the phone when I called." She walks up to her husband and smells a reek of alcohol on his breath. "You worked late, huh," she stammers with a hint of "yea right." Dad stares for a moment and says, "Ok, I did stop off for a few drinks at the local tavern, I was only there for an hour, I swear." Mom stares haplessly at him for a moment and turns on her heels, storming out of the room.

What do you think will happen next? As we can see we have love and relationship, and a family arrangement, but something is missing to make this relationship stand. We can review the scenario together to see which elements needed to make this relationship solid. In the first scene, family arrangement is in tact since it takes two to work to make ends meet. Thus, the parents are readying for work, while the children are heading off to school. Mom has done her job in preparing breakfast, and kissing dad as he rushes off to work.

Mom has also attended the meeting, and adhered to her motherly and spouse duties, and has worked at her job. Would it help if dad helped her along in the kitchen and around the house, since mom has two jobs? Yes, it would help. Still, this is only one of the elements to make a relationship stand. Sharing is always a good thing in love and relationships. When two people share, it brings them together.

Mom has emotions that are instigating trouble, since she is blaming her self for her children's failure, and shows those emotions when dad comes home with the reek of alcohol on her breath. Dad doing as he pleases, would not like it if the tables turned.

Obviously, mom is feeling frustrated and appears to take it out on dad, which makes him think or readers believe that mom is emotional. However, mom expressed her feelings with assertiveness and disagreement; still she stormed out of the room, leaving the conversation hanging in the air. We see a lack of communication in this family, since from the beginning of the story to the end; we did not hear communication between the children, mom or dad. We also need respect to make this relationship stand. When habits continue in love and relationships to breakdown the arrangement, hurt is in the making.

Habits Breaking Down Love and Relationships

Habits can make or break love and relationships. Habits form over the years, and some habits are good, while others are disturbing. Everyday a person seeks out relationships, but as the day's progress and standards are lower, frustration becomes the focus of a long journey. As a writer, I communicate with people all over the world. Many of people join chat rooms believing the right person will come their way. Once in the chat room, they soon learn that the Internet is where games are frequently to main goal of the many abroad, thus frustration sets in again.

Sexual transmitted diseases (STD) have put the breaks on love and relationship. Although few continue to join in and out of relationship searching for their soul mate, the breaks are on. Throughout the decades people have spread them self around like germs, participating in sexual relationships with the intent of leaving the person behind. Women at one time were less reluctant to have multiple partners, but as the days, progressed women too joined the bandwagon called promiscuousness.

Some relationships start with one partner believing that the other mate will change over time once love falls into place. People have started relationships with drug addicts, alcoholics, promiscuous persons and so forth, believing that they had the ability to change the person's habit. As the relationship progresses the mate with intentions of changing the other soon learns that changes are not happening. Thus, intention plays a part in how a relationship works. If the couples are out to change the other, more than likely the relationship will fail.

Intentions are important, since if the best of intentions does not exist, thus harm will be the outcome. Therefore, couples should evaluate their intentions when joining in relationship and love. The couple should also take the time to get to know each other before engaging in sex or commitments. When the two take the time to learn each other's behavior and habits they can determine if love could develop between the two of them. If the habits are tolerable, thus a relationship is possible, however if the habits are problematic, only trouble will incur, since harmful intentions exist. The person may not feel as though harmful intentions exist, since the habit covers the mind's ability to think logically.

If the person has alcohol and/or drug problems, an agreement has to take place before the person is capable of delivering a healthy relationship. The person must first admit a problem exists and learn to accept that a disease is controlling the life. Once acceptance is in place, the person must take the steps to recovering from the disease. Throughout the procedure of seeking and getting help, the person must come to terms with self and learn to love self before he/she is capable of giving love to someone else. The person must also have support and try hard to meet the demands of quitting the habit that controls his/her life. The process can take months or years for recovery, however the time is nothing compared to the results the person will experience when alcohol is no longer controlling the life. Thus, the person can then seek out, searching for love and relationship. Still, the relationship sought out should include an individual willing to provide emotional support, since relapse could occur.

At what time you are searching for love and relationship, keeping aware is essential to avoid letdowns. When a person is aware of what he/she is searching for, thus good results often follow. Therefore, we see that a healthy relationship starts when both parties have a sense of who, they are and what they are searching for in love and relationships.

Love and relationships will continue throughout our existence. Habits will also play a part in relationships, thus learning each other's habits before intimately joining is smart, since you will know if the person is right for you. Sometimes relationships develop and each other learnt the other's habits, but as the year's progress, the habits become frustrating. On this note, we must understand effective communication, since obviously there is a breakdown in the relationship. Nevertheless, what about the I love you, I love you not, relationships?

I Love You, I Love you not, relationships

I love you, I love you not, but we are in a relationship with an ending that will hurt no one but you and I....NOT

Together we join in superficial love and have children together, yet arrangement hurts no one. We join committing fornication, since we never considered marriage until our child was born.

I loved you when beauty and sex played a role but now that reality stepped in...I love you not. Oh, the harm that comes forth when people say, I love you I love you not. The two join in sexual relations and soon learn that desire took over and love was never in the making. Now we are in a superficial relationship with children involved, he is mad because of child support payments, and she is mad because she has to raise a child on her own.

The woman spends many years buying clothes, food, and supporting the child while the father does as he pleases, complaining about the child support payments. The woman lives through sickness, hurt, pain, and other types of suffering while the man complains about the money deducted from his checks. In some relationships, the man visits or spends half of his time supporting the child, while in too many instances the man spends time complaining.

Hey, you joined in a relationship that produced another human being, thus your bitching is coming from your own mistakes. Therefore, complain if you like, but the reality is, you have a child lacking the elements that make love and relationship work.

Mothers go through much more than fathers do to compose a relationship. Mothers' say I love you, while fathers say I love you not. Mothers from of old has laid it on the line by supporting their children through thick and thin, better or worse, and in sickness or health. Mothers' have walked the line while fathers complain about a few pennies to support their loved ones. Every day you hear a father complain about paying child support while a mother enforces that support for the child exists.

I love you I love you not exists, since you can see the comparison in the between lines of love and hate. What is relationship? What is love? What is marriage and reunion? What is matrimony? What makes a relationship work?

Complain, complain, complain...shame, shame, I know your name. Women bitch while you are across the table complaining about what women do and the problems you caused. Now you have a child and the woman is to blame, because you failed to adhere to precaution. You have the power and control over the woman and you know it, but still she is to blame because you did not make the right choices. Anyone knows in his or her right mind that you can take power over her, yet you blame her, because you failed.

Get real! In love and relationships, it takes two to make it work. Still, as society and the government tries hard to change, the traditions and standards fall into place. A woman in nature will fall into the arms of a man, and if that man is abusive, loving, or else with intentions to use, the woman will follow accordingly. She realizes it the day she wakes up and sees that he is not there. No matter how hard you try to change traditions, standards and morality, it remains...

The selfishness that plagues love and relationships lives through the reports throughout our lives. Regardless of who is right and who is wrong, the blame falls on the shoulders of the perpetrators of selfish love that moves throughout our lives. Thus, what part does beauty and sex, play a part in love and relationship? Where does beauty stand? Where does love exist?

If you want to complain about the mistakes, you made, lay it on someone that will not get back to the source of your mistake, since love and relationship should be built on solid true love. When joining in love and relationships consideration is essential.

Joining in Love and Relationships

Joining in love and relationships take effort to make it work. When a couple joins in love and relationship it starts out with sparks flying and gradually works up to slowness of passion. When the passion in a relationship slows, one or the other often feels that love is no long in existence in some cases. Thus, women often require attention slightly different than most men do, however men require attention to in order to feel that fleshly necessity called love.

Love nowadays is demeaning and is, grounded often on sexuality. When the sexuality weakens the couple often slows their expressions of attention, love and passion. Real love never dies. When a couple are in real love they will last for years, by communicating, respecting each other, trusting each other, caring for each other and so forth. Rarely will real love relationships base love on sex and slow the process of giving throughout the relationship.

Examples of real love are, illustrated in the Titanic experience. During the sinking of the ship, the men put down the emergency boats only allowing women and children aboard first. During the round up and at the final draw, one woman stood beside her husband and refused to board the boats without her husband accompany her. She stated in this instance that if her husband was going to die, then so was she. Some people find this gesture foolish; however, the woman stood beside her mind until death did them apart, one of the vows of marriage.

True love never ceases. When two people love each other, they will literally die for each other. If a bullet is flying in the direction of someone you love, true love will step in the way of that bullet, unselfishly. Unbelievers may think this is foolish; however, Jesus was a fine example that gave his life over for all humankind throughout the world, regardless of the person's background in life.

When two people join in love and relationships (marriage), they are making a statement. The statement is that through love the two will fight through storms, love through sunny days, and stick by each other's side until death claims their love. If adultery occurs throughout the arrangement, the disrespected party has the right to leave the relationship. Thus, if the partner is prone to committing sexual acts outside of the relationship, superficial love is often the case. Therefore, adulterous relationships are short lived.

Some relationships last even if adultery is involved when the disrespected mate decides to forgive. Still, throughout the relationship, trust must be re-earned or the relationship will not last. Often adultery leads to disrespect of the mate, lack of trust, failure in communication, and so forth. The disrespecting mate shows through the behaviors that he/she lacks the elements to love someone truly.

Some relationships are built on love/hate. When the two join in love and relationship, they soon learn that hate and love consumes their relationship. Abusive relationships are one of the examples of love/hate relationships, where one loves and the other hates. The relationships that act out of violence often lead to un-repairable harm and/or death. Therefore, superficial love often strings the two together backed with threats. The abusive partner often threatens to kill or harm someone closest to the mate, or else threatens to kill the mate if he/she leaves the relationship.

Superficial relationships may include couples joining to avoid loneliness. Often the two have failed to accept them self, and feel a sense of emptiness inside. The hole they are seeking to fill is often never filled, since the two in the relationship have not discovered them self. In other words, voids consume the relationship and overtime when/if one or the other finds them self, they may find they wasted time in an empty relationship built on threads instead of love and often the relationship will breakdown.

Before committing your self to a relationship, think long and hard about who you are and what you want out of life. Commitments are part of love and relationships that make any arrangement work. Long distance in love and relationships; can they last?

Long Distance in Love and Relationships

Few relationships are long-distant love affairs. Military men often correspond with their mates while abroad the world servicing the country. Other long distant love affairs around the world require study, since intimacy is rarely involved. Women often require intimate touching to feel gratification from a relationship. Men also require intimacy; however, few men have the capacity to restrain for a length of time without problem.

One example of a long distant love affair started when one woman decided to place a singles ad in the area paper. The woman out of curiosity was merely analyzing the results of the ads, however she responded to one ad and the two of them began a long distant relationship.

The man was a gentleman, however he had wondering eyes and into inappropriate materials, thus the woman knew that she could never take up residence with the man. The man had outstanding qualities outside of few bad behaviors, thus for the past twelve years the two stayed in touch. The woman longed to be loved, yet she knew living with the man would never work, thus she learn to accept the open relationship.

Still, she searched the world, and often wondered if anyone would ever love her the way true love works. The woman felt a loneliness, emptiness and longing to find this love while continuing her long distant relationship. While she loved the man and wish that he was not into the behaviors she so desperately hated, thus he was all she had until mister right came along. The love she felt for him was never superficial, rather it was a love that she dished out to people, since she loved human beings.

The man is actually missing out since the woman's personality type is rare, thus this woman has the capacity to dish out unconditional love. Still, in the long distant love affair the elements that make a relationship firm were non-existing.

The elements that compose a solid relationship includes, trust, intimacy, caring, consideration, loyalty, honesty, faithfulness, dreams, et cetera. When elements are lacking thus the relationship often fails, or else the couple remains in an unhappy environment. When the couple is unhappy it often leads to cheating, lying, lack of communication, and other hasty actions and words that breakdown the relationship further. Thus, how do long distant relationships stand?

Few people engage in long distant relationships, talking on the phone and Internet while having intimate relationships outside of the relationship. What type of relationship is this? Are they hoping that they are soul mates and that someday after they have slept with others that they find they are compatible and will marry?

Sure, protection is available to protect against STD (Sexual Transmitted Disease), but there is no available cure for the inhumane way you will feel after sharing your body with scores of people, or even a few.

Thus, sex often is the soul purpose that many today join in relationships. Few partners find each other attractive and compatible at the start of the relationship, but as the relationship develop and struggles come their way they might feel that compatible and the stimuli to keep the relationship going is no longer their. Thus, we see a relationship that started on weak grounds.

Solid relationships start by learning each other's habits, personality, behaviors, et cetera. A smart person will quiz, monitor, and learn what they can about the potential partner before engaging in intimacy. A smart person will spend quality time with the mate in the company of friends and family to see how the person responds to social engagements.

Love and relationships with long distant nature may or may not last, since during the relationship, intimacy will occur and most times, it will occur without the other partner participating. Therefore, true love does not usually exist in long distant relationship, because even men servicing the country cheat, engage in inappropriate actions and materials, or else they simply utilize materials to gratify their sexual desires. This is not true in all cases, but the majority you can bet do in love and relationships.

Love and Relationships

Love and relationships can have different meanings, since some people are in open relationships while others are in long-lasting relationships. When two people are in love they often go through life struggling together, loving together, and surviving together while continuing their journey in love. When a person is looking for a mate, they often look for compatible traits in another person believing that the compatibility will mean that the relationship will last a lifetime. Other people do not concern them self with compatibility since they feel opposite attracts often make a relationship more lasting.

Still, few people get into relationships because they do not want to be alone, while others are in relationships to fill their desires. Regardless of the type of relationship and the purpose of the relationship work on both parts is required to make it work.

Relationships are two people working through hard times, good times, and throughout their lifetime, working together to keep sparks in their life. At one time in life the man was considered the breadwinner, but today women are expected to work two jobs, including taking care of the home to make ends meet. Today, more divorces are on the rise, since financial difficulty, adultery and other problems occur that separate the two.

More people today are less apt to work through the difficult times than in preceding years due to the changes in the economy, social, class, gender, ethnics, and so forth.

Women nowadays are expected to do more, since the women's liberation movement, thus nowadays many women are giving back to those men what was giving to them. The good men left standing often find it difficult nowadays since they have to adjust to a new lifestyle. Women's rights have extended to the point that women are now working on highways, drilling sidewalks, building and constructing houses, businesses and so forth. The changes has brought on drastic measures for most, thus relationships these days are not as they were when women were at home taking care of the children and preparing meals for husbands coming home from work. In light words, the barefoot, pregnant and staying in the kitchen days are over, thus more men and women today are struggling harder than ever to survive, much less make a relationship work.

Other problems, such as unruly children due to changes in the law are also making it difficult for couples to stay together. Children nowadays are bringing on overloads of stress to many parents, thus later one or the other decides it is time to leave. The breakups however causes additional problems, since studies have shown that single homes or children without both parents struggle or else turn to crime to cope with the missing element in the home.

Therefore, something is needed to help families stay together, since love and relationships will never become outdated. Other types of relationships exist nowadays that never existed or else it was a hush-hush relationship in the past. Nowadays, men are marrying men, women are marrying women, and in some of these love and relationships children are adopted, thus again new strategies are needed to adapt to the changes in love and relationships.

Love is an understatement for the most part nowadays, since Agape' love and love are two different meanings. Rather, Agape' love is a form of pornographic style of love, while love is unconditional. Each day we exist we see more agape' love than love, thus this is part of the reason that divorces and breakups occur. When two people join in marriage it is standing until one or the other commits adultery or until death occurs, but nowadays the law makes it possible to get a divorce on nearly any grounds. Too many people in relationships base their love on sex, thus again the relationship will fail over time, regardless, since not much effort is put into the relationship to make it last through thick and thin, or for better or worse.

Finally, love and relationships are complicated to understand, since first you have to learn the meaning of love to have a long-lasting relationship and how love functions nowadays.

Love and Relationships Nowadays

Nowadays, love and relationships are a trip to outer space. Nowadays, people are lower standards, morals, and value all to continue a relationship. Nowadays, love and relationships is built on elements that are far removed from unconditional love. Today love derives from Agape, which is a form of pornographic commitments.

Agape love started before Christ walked the earth. Agape love is a wide-open relationship, leaving room for wonder and wandering. Most people today claim to love each other by basing their relationship on a forced trust. Thus, the couple join together engaging in sexual relationships without learning about the person's personality type or behavior patterns and later in the relationship the couple find out there are not compatible or else one or the other cheats and the relationship ends without belittling words trailing as the couple depart.

Unconditional love is rare, but it does exist. Many people think of unconditional love as a type of Agape love, however, unconditional love is the opposite. When a person seeks unconditional love, they will learn a person's behavior, background, personality type and other details before giving their body over to the mate. The person will seek out a person that is compatible, or else joins in similar activities. For example, a mate searching for unconditional love may search for someone that adheres to the same beliefs that he or she does.

Unconditional love does not brag. It does not get puffed up with pride and it will not harm the person it loves. Nowadays, we see couples bragging, or puffing up their personality with pride, which later tears down the relationship.

Today, love and relationships is getting in the way of life, since many people are fed up with the lacking elements that make up a good relationship. The world is moving fast toward failure, and relationships are catching up. Nowadays, the media as placed love in the pockets of pornography, thus couples often join with the intent of satisfying desires.

To make a relationship work a couple needs true worship, trust, and humane elements that compose a relationship. The couple needs to place media in its place by dismissing the bad and adhering to the good. Thus, watching pornographic material, violent pictures, or nudity is not working to make a relationship work. A good man or woman will dismiss any of this material and focus on good activities throughout the relationship. Sex will be in its place, and togetherness will move ahead.

If you think about it, nowadays women are saying "why should I spend my life with one man," at the same time men are saying the same. Thus, we see morals, standards and values downgrading.

Spending a lifetime with someone you love should be a joy, not a burden. If you are married, vows made between the two of you clearly state through "thickness and thin, better or worse, until death do us part." Thus, the rules of divorce should only apply if adultery is involved or death occurs. If a person is abused in a relationship then separation is necessary with divorce following, since no one has the right to hurt another individual and an individual does not have to tolerate or promote abusiveness.

Agape love is accepted nowadays, thus no one seems to worry about true love and relationships. Men join with women, women with women, men with men, and nothing is ever morally clean. Thus, the rules of the game is that man should love his wife as he loves him self and the wife should have respect for the husband. Thus, love and relationships is a two-way street with one partner working most times nowadays.

Children, wife and husband are the true definition of love and relationship. The children nowadays are breaking up homes, while wives and husband search for intimate relationships outside of the marriage to solve problems and relieve stress. When I see a man and woman joined together and notice how they treat each other, sometimes I wonder if the relationship will last. Well, looks can be deceiving and has proven more times than not that it is true. Therefore, know whom you are falling in love with before you give your heart over to your mate, since love nowadays is out of date.

Love and Relationships Out of Date

Love and relationships are outdated. Many times, I wander around searching the expressions of couples; I wonder how they stay together in love. The couples I see today often show what they desperately attempt to hide, and that is a void within their souls. The two may appear happy together, but underneath there seems to be a missing element within.

The perfect relationship never exists no matter how happy a couple appears. Couples often join in relationships to fill voids, and starting at the beginning of the relationship, the void seems to fill, but as the relationship, progresses the couple may drift apart. Thus, what makes a relationship work? Are relationships out of date; or is relationships newly defined.

Relationships consist of a man and woman, however today love and relationships are under defined, since nowadays men are with men, women with women, or threesomes, foursomes, and so forth. Couples in relationships may join in-group sex, or else participate in swinging clubs, or nudist camps.

Nowadays, men and women are consumed in pleasing, rather than learning how to love each other truly.

Love has a new meaning today. At one time, families work hard to stay together through thick, thin, better, worse, sickness, health and until death do them apart. Now, love works until someone makes the mistake that opens an emotion, sending the mate into a world of confusion, until finally the two decide they are not compatible and separate.

Love today means, I love you if you give me the room to do as I please and trust that I know the difference between right and wrong, which right to me may not be wrong. In other words, few mates may frequent stripper clubs, pornographic viewings, swinger clubs, nudist camps, or other wrongful activities, and claim that nothing was wrong with this behavior or action. Yet, the mate is opposed against the activities and behaviors, since the mate knows the result of these harmful productions. The two will argue, with one stammering, "You do not trust me." The truth is, the mate opposed is right while the other mate is seriously wrong, but the way the world views, and the decrease of morals, values, and standards; who is really going to listen to the opposed who is truly right?

Today, we can turn on the TV and nudity or profanity shatters the screen, while the world watches believing no harm is done. Thus, the morality, standards, and value drop around the world has proven nothing more than an increase in divorces; increase of violence, and decrease of humane.

The world is changing rapidly, thus the world is heading in the wrong direction, which is down. The people around the world today engage in ungodly behaviors, while many stammer, "If it feels good, do it." We are who we are, many claim. The ignorant souls are only stating an excuse to permit behaviors ordinarily unacceptable to society. At one time, television programs that depicted nudity, profanity, or other harmful actions and words were unacceptable. At one time, you never heard of stripper clubs, swinging parties, or other types of garbage on television. While many will excuse this behavior, attempting to make the behaviors right, by claiming, "Open-minds will try any thing once." This is far from the truth, since a real open-minded person utilizes judgment, caution, wisdom, et cetera, and often knows what is right and what is wrong.

As you can see, love and relationships are out of date, since love means nothing in most relationships, or else love means how much sex you are giving me. Nowadays, couples join in relationships to fill a void. Most have not identified them self, and will enter a relationship, searching for the lost soul, believing the mate will fill the wanton. Later, throughout the relationship they often find that the void is still there, and may alert their mate, stating, "I guess we made a bad choice." In addition, the conversation continues, "I do not believe we belong together." Thus, friendship is essential to make relationships work and love grow.

In addition, the conversation continues, "I do not believe we belong together." The morality level today makes us ask where love and relationship is heading.

Morality Issues in Love and Relationships where are we heading.

What is morality? Morality is a "code of conduct" expected by society, or a group, such as a religion. In other words, if you are not behaving like the majority you are ignoring morality. Yet, the question remains, what is morality. Moralities are core viewpoints.

If we continue through life with the expectation placed on us to act like everyone else how can we uphold our own beliefs? The many morality issues today are on the rise. Everyday moral issues arise, including honesty. The majority would rather hear a lie than the truth nowadays.

Moral issues such as conduct, including sexuality, behaviors, stealing, killing, and more is forever changing in viewpoints. Divorce is on the rise and fatherless children have been a moral issue for such a long time as the result. Where our country is heading, and with the expectations placed on us, stammers the moral of individuals every day. As the view of love and relationship changes accordingly, we find our self in chaos and broken homes. The code of conduct left up to those of us that enforce our behaviors, should move toward those of us with strong conscious. When others around us influence us, problems will arise.

We can see few of these problems as today children younger than twelve-years-old are having babies, while the world is growing accustom to this reaction of lowering their standards.

In the early centuries families struggled together, and regardless of the measure of suffering throughout the relationship, rarely did anyone divorce. Unfortunately, in these ages couples were condemned when divorced, even if the person was in an abusive relationship, or adulterous relationship. Few stories of faithful women from of old written in documentations, recorded that these faithful souls stood by their men no matter the struggle of the storm.

Sadly, women throughout the century have shown faithfulness to men, yet men took these women for granted, and would cheat on them, or else view inappropriate material while claiming to love. While I am not striking out at men, but the history has shown us that more women are capable of adhering to the rules of love and morality than most men. Today, we see men and women alike behaving inappropriately while claiming to love one another, and later the inappropriate behaviors escalate to divorce or broken relationships and separation.

Today, women are disposition, as they must work two jobs to help the husband make ends meet. While, the women adhere to the new ways of life, including the liberation of women, couples often find it difficult to survive love and relationship, much less the changes ongoing in society. Children often are on the road of raising them self, or else babysitters take over the raising of the children, including Nintendo, PlayStation, and Television.

Nowadays, children are killing children; open up fire at schools, and acting out on inappropriate behaviors at school, home and in the streets. We have a big problem, yet morality is constantly decreases.

During the preceding years, we all adhered to particular rules that decreased crime and increased love within the family arrangement. Families worked together with dad putting food on the table, mom taking care of the home and children, and the children attending school. At one time when a child acted out in school or at home, the child received discipline, which led to positive results in most instances. The problem was resolved and rarely did the child act out in the same behavior again, unless mental ailments provoked the child. With the new laws preventing parental guidance, we are facing ongoing problems with children, and because of the new family arrangements expected in society, we are now moving toward destruction.

As you can see the level of morality factors into the equation of love and relationships, including marriage, friendship, family, government, children, and society, et cetera. The level of morality we adhere to, determines the direction we are heading. The level also determines if love and relationships will stand through various weathers. Principals and traditional play a part in love and relationships, otherwise love would never exist.

Principal or Tradition

Love and Relationships

I have always been the type of individual that others come to when they have problems. Successfully I have contributed to helping others maintain marriages that was near its end. While Certified in Developing Capable People Skills, I intend to move forward to a Master's in Criminal Psychology. Why? I have no idea when my best potentials are obviously helping others remain married, and gain stability in their life, and so forth. The rewards for my efforts and advice have been a great reward. Examining marriage, traditions, and principals, I feel can help gain a better understanding, as well as help us to look inside ourselves to see where we can improve in our lives, and in our marriage. We must remember that God instilled in us the truth that leads to success. If you listen to your conscious, you can often find it easy to resolve most issues. We must be careful listening to our hearts, as the bible states, "the heart is treacherous and deceiving." If we want a successful marriage, we must submit to God's word by following his principals laid out in the bible.

Marriage is a commitment between two mutual individuals that is often taken lightly nowadays. A long time ago, it was nearly impossible to get a divorce; today however, nearly everyone can get a divorce on most grounds. The bible clearly states that the only grounds for divorce are adultery. Yet many today go to the County Clerk, Priest or some religious minister to take their vows and shortly thereafter file for divorce by reasons that are inconsistent of adultery. Often the motive is to test the arrangement for a time to see if the two are compatible. When there is a breakdown in the marriage, often couples will resort to divorce rather than find a solution for making the marriage work, or else commit to outside relationships believing the fornication acts will result to repairing of the marriage. Whether you have financial burdens, stresses of everyday living, pressures in the family, or influences that lead you astray, it takes work to lay a solid foundation for marriage. The price you will pay for working together will exceed the price you will pay for ignoring God's laws and principals.

The Consequences

The consequences of divorce often include alimony, in which include repayments for alimony issued by the courts. (Rapid Law) Lawyer fees, arrearages, property, child support, and other fees are pending when filing for divorce. As you can see, there is a high price to pay for lack of effort in a marriage arrangement. "What God yoked together, let no man pull apart." If a woman is in a relationship and her spouse is abusive, the woman has a right to ask for an officially permitted separation. If the man is not supporting his family, or committing adultery then a woman has a right to ask for a separation or divorce. The listed are the only recordings legal rights originally lay out whereas a man and woman can divorce or separate, yet the law often goes against the principals, and permit divorcing on any grounds.

Changing Traditions and Principals

The traditional and principal laws are often changing, which most times leads people to confusion. When people are misled, or adjusted constantly they often find it easy to take the shallow road to relief, rather than taking the extended road to recovery.

Some of the common reasons for divorce are jealousy, (which is easily fixed), abandonment, abuse, bigamy, imprisonment, guilt, adultery, and conflicting beliefs; decrease in sexual/mental/emotional satisfaction and breakdowns due to lack of work on both parts. Examining the reasons we can see that, bigamy is officially unauthorized, since it is adultery; adultery is a lawful reason, but for the most part, the reasons are shallow. Of course, no one should remain in an abusive relationship. It is nearly impossible for abusive partners to change their course. Guilt stems from lack of participating, sinful acts, or going against conscious beliefs. Imprisonment is obviously another issue that we would examine closely. Sexual, mental, and emotional issues are no reason to take the shallow road to resolve. In fact, the reason is often resolvable by both parties by understanding each other, communicating, and working toward gratification within the marriage arrangement. Breakdowns in a marriage are resolvable in most cases, providing the couple works together to find the source, come to agreement, and move forward. We can see the elements lacking in some love creates problems.

Problems and Relationships in Love

Problems within marriages often link to outside sources. For example, society, political groups, education, and religion has all worked together to send the marriage arrangement into confusion. Families today have lost sight of traditional and principal roles of family arrangements, and often use sex as the tool to make a relationship work. Marriages have become a short-lived affair rather than an enduring promise between two individuals. Many scapegoats use tools to breakdown marriages today and continue using these tools throughout the lifetime. However, studies have shown that the ultimate reason for divorce is "A person fails to consider his spouse's feelings, needs, values, and goals, or acts in disregard of them." (The Encyclopedia of Mental Health: Professor Dr. Emily MUDD)

Therefore, family members, friends, and other external sources are quick to encourage divorce, rather than working out the problems. Influences have always played a large role in causing harm to others. A person has the capability to reach down deep inside him/her self to find the answers too many problems.

Concrete

The basis for a good marriage is building the relation on solid grounds. Many people believe that sex before marriage eliminates many doubts. However, the bible encourages us to remain in celibacies until joined together in marriage. Sex before marriage links to failure in marriages, simply because a principal is, disregarded. Once the couple is married for a length of time, they often find reasons to disrupt the marriage. For example, instead of taking responsibility for their own behaviors, they accuse the other. When this takes action, nothing is accomplished and all is lost, if either party is not willing to adhere to the biblical principals, humility.

Looking for Spice

Studies have proven down through the years that pornographic materials cause divorces, child molestation/pornography, rape, incest, murder, as well as other crimes. Now tell me, how can such material spice up, or enhance romance within a marriage? The bible says, "Everyone that keeps on looking at a woman so as to have a passion for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart." (Matthew; 5:28)

Often men and women engage in erotic activities after enduring a lengthy marriage. Some engage in such behaviors before the marriage and even a short time after the marriage. For example, Men and women both, often engage in the adulterous world of fantasy and literacy. Magazines publish nudity, jokes, and promiscuous sexual relationships regardless of the pricey cost per copy. They reason, believing that people need illicit pictures and words to keep the romance alive within a marriage. They also believe that extra-martial affairs are a solution for spicing up a marriage. Contradicting the principals of the bible can lead to the escalating rate of high-priced divorces. The scriptures clearly state, "thou shall not commit adultery," as well as making the people aware that their sins will catch up to them eventually. If you think you are getting away with something, think again. The bible clearly states that your sins manifest throughout your life to the public. In addition, the media concept that "sex sells" is a corrupted philosophy. If you think about it, the concept is the same as promoting prostitution.

As we can see from reading the article and many other informative pieces that the breakdown of marriages stems from altered worldly traditions, customs, beliefs, influences, et cetera. To build a rock-solid marriage foundation, we have to communicate, adhere to the principals of the bible, work in harmony, avoid negative influences, rely on God's understanding; search deep within your soul to find the answer to the problems you and your mate are enduring, and learn to accept changes as you grow together. You must also learn to be considerate of each other; understanding, loving, unselfish, compassionate, passionate, honest, respectful, and willing to work together to build a rock-solid foundation. Marriage is a mutual promise between two individuals that requires unselfish love and a lot of work to keep together. Whether you are aware of it or not, God created us with the desire to fill our spiritual, mental, emotional, and physical needs within his guidelines. If you are not willing to explore your spiritual needs with an open-mind, most likely you will endure emotional, physical, and mental losses. You will also endure failures and much more heartache, as well as divorce as a possible result. Relationships out of love rarely work.

Relationships Out of Love

Relationships mean nothing if love is not in existence. When friends, family, marriages, or out of marriage relationships join, love has to exist to make the relationship work productively. Not everyone realizes they love someone until the person associated has disappeared from their life. The ancient phrase "You don't know what you got until it is gone," is forever standing in life. Several types of love exist that makes us analyze love and relationship; however, a degree of love is usually available.

Friendship that last for years has a measure of love, otherwise the relationship would end somewhere down the road. Even if the person moves out of the area and rarely visits, love is there, which is noted when smiles appear on faces when the person arrives in town. Long distant love affairs, or up, close and in your face love affairs vary, but love still exists.

Mothers often bond with their children, thus mothers will go to lengths to protect their child from harm. Mothers will also go to lengths to feed their children, even if it includes going below their moral standards and above the law. Mothers have killed for their children, lied, stole, sold their bodies, et cetera all in the name of love. Unfortunately, some types of love are superficial, but still a form of true love exists under the surface, even if it appears nil.

As human beings, we are created and put here on earth to care for and to love one another. Unfortunately, humanity has degraded love to the point many fail to see that it still exists. Evolution theories or the scientist around the world has many believing that they originated from monkeys, but the truth is we as created in human form, were put here to act out of love.

Fathers go to lengths to protect their children also, however the extent of action depends on the mind of the person. Similar to mother's way of thinking, fathers have murdered, stolen from others, and fought for their children all in the name of love.

Thus, the illustrations present a scenario of how love operates. When two people join in relationships, a different type of love exists. Although, when couples marry they are suppose to leave their mother and father and join their mate, many relationships are run and operated by family members, which over time breaks down the marriage.

When two people join in love and outside forces participate in the marriage arrangement, thus making decisions for the couple, problems occur. One mate may feel frustrated, since nosy friends and family members believe they know better than the couple does, how a relationship is suppose to work. Overtime, one mate may feel that the elements to make the relationship work is non-existing, and may decide that the other mate should continue the relationship with the family members and friend, and feel left out. Therefore, the mate leaves the marriage and another divorce reports on the statistic charts.

Another problem that determines how a relationship stands is the ongoing problem whereas men generalize about women, and women generalize about men. Example, "Women, they are always complaining." On the other hand, "Men, they all think alike."

Generalization is a form of stereotyping that has lead to failure in relationships for centuries. Over generalizing creates negative thinking patterns that lead to trouble often. At what time a person starts the negative pattern, the person acts on emotions often and someone is hurt, until the point one is tired and leaves the relationship.

Therefore, love comes in all forms, but to make love work, openness, honesty, trust, positive thinking, faithfulness, loyalty, consideration, hope, and other elements must exist.

When the elements that make up a relationship out of love fail to adhere to the respect that comes in all the ingredients of love, thus failure is a sure result. Relationships mean nothing when love is not accompanying the pair. Regardless of the type of relationship, love must exist to make it work. Untraditional types of love, such as fornication, or promiscuous relationships often construct out of desire, thus love does not exist and the relationship between the self and other parties involved, will not last. When sexuality determines love relationships often fail.

Sexuality Determines Love and Relationships

Nowadays, sexuality determines the direction that love and relationships are heading. At what time a couple join together they often want to fill a desire. Few of the elderly people engaging in new romances make search for someone to fill the loneliness in their life.

When sexuality, loneliness, and other selfish gain plays a part in the start up of relationship, the couple may last together for a short time, but over time problems will occur. The problems will stem from habits, words, actions, et cetera.

Down through the years the estimated divorce rate reached a higher peak than ever. Nowadays, the laws are changing, since the focus is to reduce divorces while making couples think. In Michigan, the couple must attend marriage counseling before marriage licenses are obtainable and must take STD tests. The Sexual Transmitted Disease test is a measure of protection for the couple, while the counseling session is to determine the purpose of marriage.

Few states are adding stipulations to divorce, since in most states at one time couples could divorce on any ground. Thus, the law realizes that sexuality and other selfish motives increased the statistics of divorces.

Love is more than what many realize. Selfish gain only breaks up relationships, since the purpose is to fulfill a wanton, or burning desire. Thus, to obtain a long-lasting relationship elements of love need to fall into place and be in the mind of the couple joining in relationships.

Reviewing forms of love can help you to appreciate how it works. Tough love is one of the elements that enforce the bond of love. When a mother disciplines a child for running into the streets, the mother is dishing out tough love to protect the child from harm. When a father alerts the family that problems are causing harm to the arrangement of marriage, thus instigates an open conversation to resolve the problems. The father is illustrating tough love in an effort to make his commitment stand firm.

Long-suffering is rarely in relationships today. When troubles mount up couples often decide separation and/or divorce is the way out. Troubles stemming from financial burdens, adulterous relationships, lack of consideration for the other, and so forth often lead to "I cannot take this anymore," and one or the other walks out the door. We can see that this type of relationship started out with desire in mind, since long-suffering is non-existing. If the couple started out on solid grounds, when the problems creep in they would have come to a more productive agreement. Of course, when adultery is in existing we know the person committing the act is merely acting out on his/her desire, thus considering separation and/or divorce is logical.

Abusive relationships would never start in some instances if the mate took the time to investigate the partner's background and take the time to become acquainted with the mate before permitted sexual intimacy.

While I would never blame the victim, since victims are not the force that induces the actions carried out by the perpetrator, since in some instances the relationships will never start. Thus, before I consider a relationship I listen carefully how the person responds to me. I ask questions, and if the person becomes agitated during our conversation, immediately I tell him to hit the road. I have Zero tolerance for violence, inconsideration, verbal and emotional abuse.

Thus, setting standards from the onset of any relationship can help you prevent finding love and relationship that leads to the road of separation and/or divorce. When you set standards you are making a statement, thus never letting your standards go below your beliefs is part of the solution to creating a long-lasting relationship.

Today, sexuality plays a large part in love and relationship. Sexuality is part of the elements that makes the relationship work, however it is not the ultimate ingredient to make love last. Thus, putting sexuality in its place can help you find true love and when the love starts and until death ends the relationship, the sparks of love will fly throughout the years. Standards in relationship define the outlook.

Standards in Love and Relationships

If standards are low in love and relationships, the relationship is surely going to fail. Standards compose the grounds to adhere to rules and guidelines to make any situation in life work sufficiently. Standards are outlines setup by examples and are backed with customs and beliefs, or a standard set of rules. When two people join without standards relationships often, fail over the course of years. Thus, understanding the right level of standards to share is important, since the world has its own standards, and in most instances, those standards are out of line with true love.

Standards include respect, love, long-suffering, hope, dreams, loyalty, faithfulness, honesty, trust, worship, faith, stability and so forth. No single word can define standards, regardless of any dictionary definition. Love composes the same elements, combining them to make a solid ground to stand upon, without ceasing.

Long-suffering means that a person is willing to work hard to make a relationship work without complaining at every little problem, which comes their way.

Relationships work through all weathers regardless of the level of pressure placed on the mates throughout the relationship. Of course, if one party is abusive or adulterous it makes sense to get out while you are ahead, although you love the mate. If a person commits adultery once, can you forgive the person. Does the person pose the threat of acting out on desire again when the moment presents itself?

Long-suffering is part of the standards of what one will consider. For example, some women have customs which consist of not allowing a man to teach them, believing that men are to teach them. Can a man teach you? Of course women from of old have taught sufficiently around the world are to be commended for their actions. However, can you respect a woman that believes that women are not to teach men? This is a standard, backed by custom, beliefs and upbringing.

Most people today could not respect such a woman. Today many women are liberated, while many men are submissive in nature, thus the reversal of common traditions and standards are falling to the back, while divorces are increasing.

Consider a few details when considering standards, love and relationships. The proper formula that makes love work through thick and thin is, man is submissive to Christ, woman submissive to husband, children submissive to parents, and husband and father is to illustrate love and to treat their mate and children as they would treat them self.

Today, love and standards follow an entirely different pattern. Few men are submissive to women, few women are rebellious to men, and children disrespect their parents and Christ is out of the picture.

Today, both men and women have to struggle to make ends meet while someone else raises the children. The term equilibrium has developed into a challenge, rather than a love. Thus, since the movement of equilibrium stepped in the picture women are becoming men and men becoming women, while children are battling to cope. We were all created equal in the eyes of God, thus the imbalance came from humankind's way of thinking.

If you let love grow it will grow through the channels intended. Many people have their own concept of how love is, thus they often force the other to adhere to their form of thinking, which is a form of standard and belief. Thus, the person may draw up a picture in their mind based on the past thoughts, theories, opinions, emotions, et cetera, conjuring up their own idea of how love is suppose to be.

When this happens, the partner becomes frustrated, since he or she has his or her own idea of how love works. They begin a battle, attacking each other's emotions, thus finally something gives and the relationship becomes a chain of emotions waiting for the right moment or opportunity to arise that leaves excuses to abandon the relationship. The standards, trust, respect, hope, dreams, love, and other mechanisms that make love grow die.

To learn how to make a relationship work, one must learn standards and the mechanisms that come along with the definition, learning while working together. Tearing down love stems from bad relationships and the elements that make love exist.

Tearing Down Relationships

What tears down relationships? Various objects or mechanism will tear down a relationship. When a person cheats, a relationship will fall apart. When family members or friends violate the rights of mates relationships will fail. When a person disrespects a relationship and persists in disrespecting the mate a relationship may fall apart.

Emotions play a large part in relationships. When the emotions feel triggered and/or threatened a relationship will start to deteriorate. A strong relationship will know that problems will arise throughout any relationship, but it will take long-suffering to make the relationship work. Long-suffering individuals will have patience, which means that the person will bear trials, suffering and pain without complaining. Therefore, we can see that communication makes a relationship work, since lack of communication leads to frustration.

What tears down a relationship? When two people engage in intimacy without learning what the other person needs, feels, thinks, and so forth, thus acting out of desire leads to tear down of relationships.

Love is the element necessitated to make any relationship work. Thus, love is defined in depth since it revolves around various aspects and meanings. In other words, love does not act out greedily, hatefully, egotistically, and in a jealous nature. Jealous is one of the leading causes that tear down relationships. Few men find it difficult to relate to a woman that makes more money than he does, while women find it difficult to accept that men (like women) give their attention to others. Unfortunately, men more so than women have a wandering eye and often makes the women feel inferior to other women. True love does not wander. If a person loves another person, the partner will not look at another person with lustful intents. Thus, to feel loved security and trust must exist; otherwise, a tear down will develop over time.

What tears down a relationship? Sometimes incidents and accidents will tear down a relationship. Over the years people have fallen victim to crime, or else endured physical impairments resulting from an accident. When the couple met each was intact, thus paralysis, or lack of physical movement in few areas of the body has led to tear downs in relationships. We can see true love does not exist in these types of relationship, since desire is the ultimate reason that someone will leave their mate due to illness, or physical lacking.

Desire is the root of most teardowns in any relationship. Sometimes crimes may lead to tear down since a stalker may cause tremendous emotional attack that one partner breaks and decides he or she cannot take anymore. Relationships of the past may interfere with new relationships and cause a degree of interruptions that finally sometime gives. Again, true love does not exist, since true love will stand through all types of weather.

Thus, love consists of respect, love, trust, honesty, faithfulness, loyalty, long-suffering, consideration, sharing, giving, taking, et cetera. Few couples in relationships may complain that the mate is using them. Thus, they fail to realize that in any relationship using one or the other exists. Thus, the term "use" is an emotion trigger that presents a threat. Therefore, turning it around and saying we use each other in a relationship, giving and sharing is the ultimate outlook that will make the relationship work.

To love someone means that you will give your life over to protect him or her if necessary. A true love will fight and defend the mate to all lengths, including death. To give you an example of true love we can review Jesus' history when he gave his life over to save all humankind from death. Jesus is the ultimate example of love that we are instructed to follow that determines if true love exists.

Love also consists of touch love. Sometimes when a mate fails, or makes a mistake loving discipline is necessary. Women never want to approach their husbands in an aggressive fashion, since he will only rebel. However, if the wife or mate addresses the issue with loving coaching the mate most likely will listen. Likewise, if a man treats his wife or mate in an unloving fashion, rebellious parenting will display itself in most instances. The problem is not love or relationship, the problem is lack of humanity.

The Problem Love and Relationship

The Problem

The problem nowadays is that many people believe that love leaps forth naturally. The bible clearly noted that a-ga'pe (Agape love) is an unselfish act; however, the world has place agape love in a pornographic content. Agape love does not base its action on emotion because it is a choice of the will that leads to action. Many individuals go into a marriage based on sexual gratification and "what you can do for me" type of relationship. As you can see, selfishness is a major issue that often leads to divorce.

When people are selfish, the minds are often shallow. A shallow minded individual is opening up potential for a breakdown in communication and marriage.

Communication is a therapeutic action or gesture that moves a person to learn, understand, and act out on his or her new findings appropriately. In fact, records illustrated that 50% of the couples that attended counseling were divorced, or else contemplating divorce. Communication is having an open-mind without defilement while exploring possibilities, reading between the lines, and listening and hearing what the other person has to say. Communication is more effective when both parties consider the others needs, wants, feelings, emotions, values, and beliefs. Of course all elements are needed to set the basis of communication, however, communication expands further. Most people believe that communication is verbal. This is not true. Communication consists of body language, environment, expressions, words, et cetera. Have you sat down and spent five minutes with you spouse gazing into each other's eyes? If you have you are communicating feelings, emotions, and words that you may have missed when both of you were arguing back and forth. Have you looked at your mates material tastes? If so, you are getting a message as to what your spouse is interested in, or prefers over other needs. What about your spouse's behavior patterns, gestures, et cetera, behaviors can speak a million languages if you take the time to study closely.

Another issue within the communication area that many struggle with (and the issue is related to lack of education), is dialect. We all have our way of communicating. We all have our own languages. This is where you will need to listen carefully, and hear what the other person is saying. It certainly helps if you take the time to learn more about your partner's customs, traditions, beliefs, et cetera.

Communication is an act of showing love to one another, provided, that argumentation or communication does not lead to aggression, or violent behaviors. Few relationships are consuming their energy by arguing throughout their relationship, thus eventually if an agreement does not fall in place, the relationship will fall apart. If a person is in a violent/abusive relationship, the final result will lead to death and/or termination of using their body to function in society. Thus, abusive relationships lead nowhere but to further harm. Thus, abusive relationships are dangerous and recommendations are clear that the partner victimized by the mate should remove them self from the relationship as peaceful and quiet as possible to avoid further harm.

Often persons' in abusive relationship believe that the mate will change. It has happen once or twice throughout the history of abusive relationships, but for the most part the person will not change his course in life. Therefore, hoping is only wasting time, whereas the victim can escape and find true love where no pain is involved. The statistics show that every 3 seconds a woman is beaten and out of the abusive statistics, every couple of seconds a woman dies.

In the past, abusive relationships were men battering women, but nowadays women fed up with abuse are hitting back. The communication illustrating in the fights only lead to death or uncovering harm. If children are in the picture, thus it is more complicated, since the abusive party often utilizes the children as a decoy to act out violently and prevent the mate from leaving. Abusive partners will lie, cheat, steal, hurt, and even murder. Therefore, the problem nowadays is not only failure in the communication channels; it is far more deadly in some instances than breakdowns in a marriage. Thus, wanton love and relationships lead nowhere, but to disaster.

Wanton in Love and Relationships

Many relationships today start out with a wanton, or else a burning desire to commit fornication, or sexual relationships with the other party. Few relationships rarely start out in friendship, thus the focus of starting relationships in most instances is sex.

All types of people around the world search for love to fill a burning wanton inside. Few people have family in mind; still they search for a partner based on their sexual desire. The concept often lands them in bed with multiple partners until the right person comes along. From the beginning of time, men and women have joined in relationships. The relationships start out in an appearing perfect outlook, but over time when stress and stressors assume and escalate the partners feel frustrated.

Nowadays, couples are struggling to make ends meet by both partners working while the children find ways to raise their self, or else babysitters take over the upbringing. As you can see the level of stressors in the world can cause harm to any relationship, however those exercising long-suffering often make it through all types of storms. The hurricanes of life makes it difficult to stay together, thus long-suffering is necessary to make it work.

Men in relationships from of old have labored to make relationships work; unfortunately, the history of unfaithful men has caused a breakdown and revision of the concept of love and relationships. Nowadays, women are bosses half the time while men are bosses the other half, and sometimes one is controlling the other all times.

Unfaithful extends further than cheating, since it is lying, stealing, cheating, and committing an act against the commitment of the relationship. Cheaters might as well slap or punch their mate, since the affect of unfaithful breaks the heart into, and a tremendous amount of pain follows. Persons cheating and thinking they are getting away with something fail to realize that all things come into light over time. If you have made a mistake in your relationship, it is wise to face up now and accept the penalties, since in the end you will suffer anyway.

Thus, wanton brings forth impure thinking, which gradually leads to mistakes. Behaviors stem from impure thoughts and slowly work on the emotion to tear it down, and force the person to commit acts out of ordinary. The emotions, or else the heart are treacherous and will deceive if you allow room.

Therefore, to start relationship elements should be in place. If you are lacking certain elements likely, you will join a relationship that will be short-lived. A person should have an idea of what he or she is searching for before committing to another person. If you understand your self, likely you will have understanding when your mate needs you. Relationships include sex, but it also includes communication, love, sharing, compassion, long-suffering, honesty, trust, and other elements to make it last.

Communication is one of the strongest tools that will determine the direction of any relationship. Businesses often fail due to lack of communication, likewise intimate relationships will fail if communication is lacking. Yet, communication is merely one of the tools to make a relationship work. Some arrangements are defiled since one mate or the other will use sex as a tool to get their way. If you listen to men talk, you may have heard many of them say, well, preparing for another night on the couch. Thus, the woman is using sex to control her relationship and a breakdown in communication is evident.

Unfaithfulness in relationships often lead to destruction, thus the people that feel outside love affairs spice up relationships are only fooling them self. These types of relationships start with wanton, end with wanton, and failure in communication is obvious. Some people communicate, but use the term open mind to get what their wanton fulfilled. In other words, a man may say to his mate when he asks her to commit an act of threesome that you should have a open mind it will make our relationship last forever. This is not true, what he is doing is tearing down trust, and using openness to take advantage of his mate. Open minded has standards, values, beliefs, and a measure of caution verses having the reason to commit adultery, or fornication outside of the relationship. Looking at the common problems in love and relationship can help you stay focused.

Common Problems in Love and Relationships

Common problems in love and relationships are outnumbering the fun and loving times in today's relationships. People are struggling harder today to make a living and working less to maintain a loving relationship. The almighty dollar has taking over the world and love is moving further back.

Thus, common problems today often break up relationships over time. The almighty dollar with highest seniority has taking over the world and everyone is working overtime to get a peace of the great pie. Men at one time were the breadwinners, but today women and men have to work hard to bread home the bacon.

Scratch that last paragraph. Rather today, men and women have to move into relatives homes and combine incomes to make ends meet. The world relies on politicians to rule their lives, thus these nominees voted in by the same people complaining are making it difficult to survive life, much less love.

While financial problems are part of the issues that keeps love on the back burner, other problems cause love and relationship to fail. The media is constantly narrating stories and case studies of love and relationships failing and the ultimate predator that destroyed the love and relationships was pornography, violence, and inappropriate materials.

When people join in illicit behaviors, viewing, activities, et cetera, it can only lead to harm. While there are women in the world that will engage in inappropriate relationships, viewing, et cetera with their mate, they are only sitting them self up for loose and harm, since the burning need to feel love will never find fulfillment.

Pornography and violence has proven over the years to cause harm, and to lead people into destruction. The actions carried out by these types of people include, child molestation, rape, murder, violence, et cetera.

The mind wasn't created to store harmful content. Rather the mind was created to fulfill humanity. Couples were created to fulfill each other's needs and desires, but to work toward a goal. Thus acting out on lust is an ungodly devotion. The person often commits the demands of evil formality, thus love is non-existing.

Love stands through all types of weathers. When two people have the tools to make love grow the two will often work out differences together. Wives are wise to allow their conduct to speak aloud, while showing restraints while conversing with their mate. Sure, men can do things that make us mad enough to scream, but screaming only makes matters worse and love is pushed toward the back.

In other words, love speaks for its self and allowing conduct to enforce the relationship toward a positive direction can only make room for thinking. Men are thinkers. From of old, men were taught to repress their emotions. Men were also taught that they were the men and it is their obligation to be the man of the house, while the women took care of the home. This is a traditional thinking pattern that has proven far more productive than the reversed roles today. Still, the man is to love his wife as he loves him self. Therefore, if a man is showing you that he has no loved for him self, how can you expect him to love another person?

Men with wandering eyes, or viewing inappropriate shows, participating, or reading inappropriate materials are only saying to you, I disrespect you as a woman, as a human, and my desires come before your needs.

Thus, a good man will not engage in activities or entertainment that feeds the mind harmful contaminates that will produce negative thinking and behavior patterns. Rather, a good man will move the obstacles causing problems, or obstacles that potential lead to harm out of the way. Likewise, a good woman will not engage in such behaviors or activities and will work hard to make her relationship work.

Another of the common problems today, is that people join in love for the wrong purposes. People that join in love out of desire, emotions, or impulses often end the relationship on bad grounds later. Humanity plays a large part in love and relationships.

Humanity, Love and Relationships

Humanity is an element that enforces love and relationship. Humanity illustrates humane, and shows qualities of human creation throughout the course of the lifetime. Humans have mechanisms created inside of them that compose all the elements that make love grow. The elements of trust, honesty, hope, dreams, loyalty, faithfulness, self-control, long-suffering, communication, listen, hear, et cetera makeup a human being. Compassion, consideration, emotions, thoughts, fantasies, and strength also compose a human being.

When a person lacks humane, humanity love and relationships are short-lived, and rarely does the person live a productive lifestyle.

Humans come in all forms, and sometimes-mental patterns are off balance due to mental illnesses, physical ailments, and/or ungodly teachings. Opinions, theories and philosophy often lead up to problems throughout human existence simply because everyone thinks they have all the answers to the questions that promote life.

Persons with mental illnesses are often left without love, since philosophers or therapists left the notion in people's heads that these people are not capable of loving someone else. This has proven throughout the years to be an outright lie, since mental ill people love everyday, and often seek out true love and provides devotion to their relationships. Sure, there are few types of people that do not have the ability to love (or else love the way humanity expects), but these types of people often have mental illnesses that include dangerous ailments.

Psychopathic individuals have developed relationships and worked through the relationships, but still these people often cause harm, or have harmful intentions. Many believe that psychopathic minds are dangerous minds, or murderous minds, but this is not true. Thus, theories, opinions and philosophers have left a trail of broken relationships by inserting notions into minds around the world.

Down through the years lack of humanity has lead to failure in love and relationships. Inhumane acts consist of lacking respect for mates. When a person fails to respect the mate, the relationship often deteriorates if the partner fails to learn to respect the right of the other.

Again, this is where beliefs and standards come in, since stepping on your mates belief and standards often leads to chaos. The traditions and basic laws of love and relationships are ever altering, which most times guides love into the wrong direction. At what time persons are, give the wrong impression about how love works the minds of humanity turn into an evolutionary root that leads to nothing. Thus, belief, traditions, and standards are the root of humankind and when those roots are altered by influential notions relationships tend to become frustrating rather than loving.

Many times a relationship can find resolve in both parties work together to remove the problems that cause destruction. Jealousy is one of the leading causes of divorce and separation, yet jealousy is understated and overstated in most instances. A couple may strike out of jealousy for various reasons including one partner making more income than the other partner does. Thus, this is a common problem in the world and many of the complainers are men.

Men focus on pride and dignity often, which creates another problem in relationships and love. When the spouse or partner is not meeting his demands, chaos and arguments usually develop. Thus, nowadays it takes two people, or rather four people to make ends meet. Therefore, amount of income generated in the home should not be a problem, rather a reward if financial obligations are met.

Other problems such as lack of performance in love and relationship drain partners and thus separation and/or divorce often results. When one partner is not fulfilling his/her obligations, or else using sex as a weapon to get their way; or else showing lack of interest in the other partner, failure surely will follow.

Thus, relationships include giving and taking. When one partner is giving more than the other is, failure is surely to result. Giving includes intimacy, caring, sharing, et cetera. When two people share they are giving the best of each other, thus the relationship often leads to love. Giving is one of the elements that compose love, yet other mechanisms are essential to make love last. Looking at love and relationships can help you make the right choices.

Looking at Love and Relationships

Something brought to my attention today that made me think about life, love and relationships. Searching for new information pertaining to love and relationship, I decided to watch the latest program titled Wife Swap. At first, the title gave me the wrong impression, but as I watched a few of the programs, I saw a plan in the making.

The program makes people think about their current situation. Families agree to switch lives in the program, thus following each household rules and style of living. The program helps the people to see what they are failing to do in the relationship to make it work; at the same time, it helps them to see what type of people they are and why their mate is at the end of the road.

At first I thought, you could not get me to agree to this type of therapy, but as I watched the program, I thought what a genius that came up with this notion.

The program brings many things to light. One program illustrated a homemaker bonded to a man with chauvinistic attitudes, and the other family illustrated reversal roles in the relationship arrangement. The man keeps up the home while the woman worked and came home and waited on hand and foot by her mate. The roles switched and the couple later saw what they needed to do to make their relationship more productive.

This concept constructed by a genius, was a great idea. Maybe if families switched roles they may see that the grass is not always greener on the other side.

Families often take each other for granted, which leads to failure or breakdown in the relationship. Thus, thinking the grass is greener in another pasture is only setting your self up for a fall. Families work in harmony not against the other. Thus, a man, woman and children working to progress in a relationship or family unit are a solid family from beginning to the parting of death claims their love.

The world philosophers have from of old, filled the minds of people with unproductive thinking. The concept that one person in a relationship is boss over the other is one of the bad influences and examples sent across the world, and this concept causes harm. At work, you have bosses. At home you have two loving people working together to make love grow and stand firm. There are no bosses in relationships, rather there is a joint commitment that both will work equally to make a relationship work.

Love often fails when the love is impure. In other words, when emotions, theories, opinions, desires and impulses make up the relationship, thus true love does not exist. This type of relationship concepts love as a toy, or superficial mechanism, rather than a realness of life and love...

Therefore, when committing to love and relationship it is wise to put all those wise tales aside and listen to the innerness of your self and your mate. Two people that know what they want out of life will work harder to reach their goals.

If a couple, has no idea, what they want from life how can they expect to know what they want out of love and relationship? Thus, learning each other is part of growing, but learning to know you is part of living and loving throughout your life.

The folk tale or idea that you don't know what you got until it is gone is one of the better concepts ever produced by humankind. Sometimes it takes an ending for one mate to see that the relationship was not as terrible as they thought.

Fantasies are another issue that burns out relationships. People often utilize fantasies as a tool for keeping the sparks flying in a relationship, however history of relationships have proven that inappropriate fantasies cause harm. Fantasies when overworked will lead to adultery, fornication outside of a relationship, and has proven to lead to violence and murder. Therefore, building a relationship and utilizing fantasy as the ultimate tool to make love grow will only prove sour.

Therefore, putting your self in someone else's shoes may help you to see what you need to change to make your relationship work. Few people believe that love is blind. To the contrary, people are blind and love is on track.

Love is Blind in Relationships

The old folk tale that love is blind is politically incorrect. People are blind to the mechanisms that make love work, and this blindness comes from beliefs, traditions, teachings, et cetera. Love knows exactly where it stands, while people rarely consider what they want out of a relationship and often join out of emotion, desire or impulse.

Love has the ingredients that make up a good relationship, while people lack the elements that compose love. Relationships built on solid grounds with all elements in place will stand through any type of weather. Blind love affairs often fall apart, simply because beliefs, standards, motive, and elements that compose love are lacking, or non-existing.

Examples of blind love and true love are visual when we consider the types of love carefully. When a couple joins in blind love they often consider gain, sexuality, and a need to fill emptiness within at the same time, they miss the true concept of what love means. If you have, emptiness within it is obvious you have not discovered the person you are and on this note, you will not have the skills or wisdom to know what you want from a relationship.

Emptiness stems from failure. Failure to recognize your personality type, or learn your type of person will often leave a void in the pit of your life. When a person comes to terms with their emotions, thinking, personality, and learn to modify their behaviors to live a more productive lifestyle the person has the ability to give love and receive love.

Thus, the folk tale that love is blind is a serious mistaking notion put into the heads of many, thus lead to the breakdown in relationships worldwide. A person must learn to accept them self and learn to adhere to healthy living before they cultivate skills to work out a relationship. If the mind spends the days and nights consumed in chaos, or emotional thinking, thus joining a relationship now will only lead to heartache later.

True love starts out with both persons knowing the direction they are heading. The couple has intentions, which include love and working together to make a family develop and grow. When financial burdens, problems with children, or other problems come their way they will use self-control and exercise long-suffering while working together to minimize the threats placed on their emotions. True love will not allow entertainment, behaviors, habits, activities, children, family, friends, or others come between their relationship, starting problems.

True love will not allow room for obstacles to move in and take control of lives. When a couple finds true love, devotion and commitment stand firm, while outside forces that often causes problems for relationships are in its proper perspective.

When people join in love, relationships, and their pathway blinding their direction, thus something is missing in the relationship. Of course, bad things befall us all, but still the relationship standing on solid grounds, will withstand the disturbances.

Love built on faith and trust often withstand any weather, while blind couples walk the path of life stumbling, bickering, and falling apart along the way. The love often redirects in love since the obvious tools are lacking in the relationship to make it work.

Men have their place in relationships as well as women having their place. Nowadays the roles reversed thus confusing the true definition of love. The pressures of life are enough, or rather should be enough to enforce love, but obviously, the world is in chaos and confusion, that love is never enough anymore.

True love works together to enforce productivity. True love never stops working and will work harder when the storms of life pose a threat to the arrangement. A man will not allow room for disturbances in his family, including controlling entertainment, activities, work, children, and outside forces to produce a good outcome of his relationship.

Thus, blind love is abusive relationships, wanton relationships, and relationships built on disturbing grounds, meaning that the elements to compose love do not exist, or are lacking.

Therefore, when considering love and relationship one should reach down within their existence while weighing out the elements that makeup a person. What do you have inside of you that prove that you can work through any relationship in life? What are you lacking in you that need analysis and revision? Reversal in relationships also plays a part in love and relationships today.

Reverse Love and Relationships

Matrimony or relationships are a promise flanked by two joint persons that both would work hard to fulfill the vows made between the two of them. At one time divorces were rare, but nowadays we hear reports of divorce around the world daily. The law has made it easy for couples to divorce on any ground; however, due to the increase of divorces the law is starting to reconsider their laws. The laws of God laid open the true directions when the law stated that a man could not divorce his wife unless she commits adultery. This is true for women, since they too can divorce when one partner commits an act of adultery.

Nowadays, it takes two to make a relationship work, since both parties must work to make ends meet. Therefore, the selfishness of gain has lead to the destruction of homes, since children have no direction, while parents focus on money.

The reverse in love and relationships has also led to problems. In some instances, women work while the men stay at home and take care of the children. Few blame the changes on the Liberation of Women; however, this is merely an excuse to enforce laziness. From the beginning of time, man was the breadwinner. Now, women are breadwinners while men are moms.

Likewise, women have taken the role of playing dad. Where does this change lead? What directions are relationships heading? The relationships nowadays are heading toward a world of chaos, separation and/or divorce.

Divorce in its self makes a statement. When two people separate they are saying, I do not have the elements to make love last, or to love someone else. Most people think of divorce as love no longer exists, but unconditional love never dies. Unconditional love works overtime by utilizing the human mechanism incorporated into their souls from the beginning of time. The mechanisms, including long-suffering, self-control, respect, honor, love, trust, et cetera often lack in relationships that lead to divorce and/or separation.

Of course, if adulterous behaviors, abuse or neglect is involved in a relationship it does not mean that one person in the relationship did not exercise his or her human mechanisms and that love is not in existence.

The one partner may have worked hard to make the relationship work; however, the other partner had obvious selfish gain that it broke down the trust and other elements that compose love.

Sometimes self-control is not enough, especially with today's relationships. Since the reverse of relationship a new direction is essential, otherwise divorce will continue to upsurge. Yet, we still must wonder which direction is healthy, since the world is now seeing that the first set of rules lay out on humankind were more productive than those set up by humanity.

The rules today allow relationships to end on most any ground and permits marriages to begin on the same level. While few states are placing stipulations on both marriage and divorce, it is not enough to stop or slow the ongoing increase of divorces and separation.

The rules originally began as follow. The man is in subjection to Christ, woman in subjection to husband, children in subjection to parents, and man love his family as he loves himself.

The problem came when the rules were broken. At what time man became abusive, neglecting and not supporting their families and adulterous, thus new laws were in the making. Unfortunately, men more so than women in the past committed adultery. The woman was entitled to leave her mate on these grounds, yet in an abusive relationship, the woman forced by the laws remains married to the mate.

Abusive relationships often lead to ungodly pain, suffering, and death on some occasions, thus asking or demanding someone to remain faithful in this type of relationship is an act of inhumanity. Therefore, humanity is an element that needs readdressed, since the laws and society often lack the human mechanism that was naturally giving to us by God to make love and relationships work. The reverse of love and relationships is another problem that increases divorce and promotes separation. Thus, learning the steps in love and relationships can only enhance your life.

Steps in Love and Relationships

Learning the steps in love and relationship can help you avoid broken hearts and broken relationships. The steps in love and relationships compose of various aspects, variant, and variation of elements.

To take the steps in love and relationships a person will need to gain the human mechanisms in self-first before committing in a relationship. The human mechanisms compose loyalty, honesty, faithfulness, openness, consideration, care, honesty, long-suffering, self-control, communication, et cetera.

Once you cultivate the human mechanisms that make love work productivity, thus then you can begin your search to find love. When searching for love, first you must cultivate the human mechanisms and put them to use without cease. Once in tact you will walk cautiously into the commitment of relationships rather than rushing ahead to fill a desire or emptiness, thus landing at the end of the road with a broken heart or broken relationship.

When you have an overall stand on who you are you will know then what you want from a relationship. If you lack the human mechanisms that compose love and the ability to enforce standards, beliefs and the mechanisms, love will fail.

Once the mechanisms are in place when a person of interest comes your way you will exercise your patients and self-control to determine if the person is your soul mate. In other words, desire, impulses, or emotions will not get in the way or help you make a decision about the relationship.

Relationships that start instigated by impulses, emotions or desire prove unhealthy during the course of the relationship and often fail. Young couples often show examples of failed relationships, since we can see desire, emotion and impulse joins the relationship, especially when you hear oh he is cute. Alternatively, wow, look at her. The two join with the ultimate relationship breaker in mind, and that is the desire to have the other with no apparent skills to commit in a relationship.

Thus, starting relationships, the first step is to consider what the person can provide in a committing relationship. What is your reason for seeking love and relationship? What is the attracted person in question, what is his or her reason for joining in love and relationships?

Communication is the ultimate tool that makes love work and relationships last. Thus, when you meet that person that peek your interest asking him or her want they want out of a relationship is opening the door to insight. Once you have insight the picture will fall into place after you have taken the time to get to know the person that peeked your interest.

Now we have a relationship in the making. Where is it heading? If you have taking the time to become friends first, thus the relationship most likely is heading in a good direction. If both you and the partner have demonstrated respect, communication, honesty, loyalty, and so forth, it is obvious a good relationship is in the making.

Have the two of you shared your dreams? Will those dreams interfere with the relationship? Amazingly, relationships have fallen apart simply because the two partners had different dreams, which lead them in different directions.

If you dreams or partners dreams are a cause for interference you may want to reconsider or else exercise your communication skills to see if terms of agreement can fall into place without causing anger later in the relationship. If not then you may want to step back and take a broader look at the direction the relationship is heading. While no relationship is perfect, it is possible to have a relationship built on love and long-suffering.

You will also need to consider habits and behaviors. Does the person that peek your interest have habits and behaviors that you can tolerate throughout the relationship? Once you cultivate human mechanisms to make your life work productively and your relationship, last you will soon learn that standards and beliefs fall into place.

If habits and behaviors upset you now, imagine how those habits and behaviors will affect you once wear and tear of the relationship creeps in...

Thus, what are the human mechanisms that compose love and relationships?

The Human Mechanisms Composing Love and Relationships

Having the human mechanisms in order to compose love and relationships determines how a relationship will stand. To learn or to make love and relationships work we must learn to use the tools of human nature that enforces solid grounds. Thus, the elements compose love are, self-control, long-suffering, communication, faithfulness, loyalty, honesty, trust, love, modesty, maturity, faith, dreams, respect, intelligence, hope, et cetera. To help you learn I will breakdown the elements briefly defining the meaning of love.

Self-control is one of the human mechanisms that enforce long-suffering, loyalty, honesty, openness, et cetera. In relationships couples make a commitment to one another, which is a promise that both will work to make the relationship work by doing their part. Self-control consists of exercising patience while avoiding strikeouts. In other words, the person will not act out on emotions, impulses or desires throughout their commitment. This mechanism will halt adultery, arguments, violence, while minimizing mistakes.

Long-suffering is similar, since self-control must prove faithful throughout the relationship. Long-suffering means that a person will not allow room for immaturity during the trial of the relationship. Long-suffering is endurance, which means that when troubles come along the two of you will work together to resolve the problems. Thus, endurance backs performance and determines how you will stand during adversities or hardships.

Communication is the key ingredient that makes love work, businesses to produce productiveness, friendships to last, et cetera. Communication is not always verbal, rather good communication skills require listen, hearing, understanding, compassion, et cetera. Communication will also require verbal response while exercising patients and self-control. The thoughts must surpass the emotional response to make communication work effectively.

Faithfulness is a steadfast human mechanism that illustrates affection and loyalty. When a person joins in relationships the commitment lays the foundation for faithfulness, thus the parties involved are stating I will illustrate loyalty throughout our commitment. True love will not lie or else commit fornication outside of the relationship.

Loyalty is fidelity, in that the person will hold true to faithfulness and remain honest throughout the relationship. Thus, loyal souls make no room for relationships outside the arrangement to come in and destroy the commitment.

Honesty is more complicated to define, since nowadays people often believe they have their own level and out views of the term. Honesty is making statements with evidence to back the words. Thus, honesty is straightforward, chaste, sincere, and upholds integrity. Honesty backs true beliefs and productiveness of actions, words, behaviors, et cetera.

Trust is an earned element of love. If one partner is acting, inappropriately obvious room for trust to move in is lacking. Trust is strength, confidence, loyalty, respect and honesty. When trust is lacking in a relationship it is obvious that someone in the relationship is not fulfilling their part, or something in the character of the mate is lacking the mechanism that allow room for trust. Thus, trust is not a demand; rather it is a learned and earned trait.

Modesty is a freedom of the elements that breakdown the relationships, including conceit or vanity. Thus, boisterous relationships often fail, since vanity overrides the human elements that make love grow. Thus, emptiness, valueless thinking, and pride often lead to harmful intent. Modesty also includes acting out inappropriately, or else engaging in entertainment or activities that are against love and relationship arrangements.

Maturity bases thinking on slow consideration while focusing on problems, or otherwise. Relationships often fail since maturity is often lacking when communication, decisions, or problems are in consideration.

Respect is also a learning and earning process, rather if one partner is disrespecting the other by violating the mechanism that compose love, thus how can the person be expected to respect the other. Thus, respect requires consideration, communication, and other human mechanisms, since it is a process.

Dreams going in separate directions and distance apart will often cause harm to a relationship. Family is the original concept of love and relationship with each member having their role in the arrangement.

Intelligence, hope and faith are obvious elements that compose love, since without intelligence, communication will fail, and without hope and faith, love will die. Finally, where is love and relationships heading?

Where is Love and Relationships Heading

Love down through the years has proven to lead toward an untrue type of love, since today respect, consideration and other elements of love are non-existing. When two people join in relationships and love they must adhere to the advice provided to them by the Law of God and not man. When couples step on boundaries and disregard true advice they often find them self-heading down the path to divorce and/or separation, thus, finding true love takes skill, patients, long-suffering, and other human mechanisms to make love last.

To find true love one must exercise self-control. When self-control is in its place, the person will evaluate or assess any situation that comes their way. Self-control leads a person to thinking logically and critically at what time serious commitments are in the making. Self-control exercised throughout every activity, or decision made in many homes only enforces love. When a child disobeys the parent self-control is essential, otherwise the parent may loose control and possibly cause harm to the child.

One example of utilizing self-control is visual in the following assessment. A man comes home from work late. His wife prepared dinner expecting her mate at a particular hour. The man is four hours late and when the woman phoned his place of work, she had found he already left hours ago. The woman obviously has a purpose to feel angry, however acting out on the anger may lead to additional problems. Thus, the woman calmly approaches her husband after warming up his dinner and politely asks where have you been?

The man bitterly stammers it is none of your business where I have been. The woman instead of allowing her emotions strike back, calmly states, I care about you and feel concerned about your well-being. When you do not come home after work and I call wondering where you are at, I feel worried. I do not know if something has happen to you, if you are ok, or if something is wrong.

The man stares aimlessly for a moment at his wife, and finally (acts in an adult manner) says, you are right. I had a bad day at work and went to Robert's house to talk. I know I should have given you a call, and I am sorry. The two end the night talking about the husband's day and no further harm is in existence.

Assessing the situation we see the woman utilized self-control regardless of the threaten emotions the husband forced upon her. The man first acting hasty, and immature, but when he seen his wife had legit concern he adjusted his attitude and committed to his wife.

The assessment brings us to maturity. When a relationship joins and maturity is, lacking often the relationships will turn sour. Thus, maturity is visual in the previous illustration. When a person exercises self-control, they are enforcing the maturity in the relationship, thus acting out childishly only leads to problems.

A childish relationship is when one party or the other fails to see the seriousness and commitment in a relationship. Relationships focus on commitment, thus when seriousness is lacking the relationship will endure storms.

Of course, natural problems arise in relationships, however childish behaviors only add to the problems. The question arises when a childish relationship develops. Where is love and relationship heading?

The truth is if the mate has tolerance, patients, self-control, and long-suffering combined to a degree the relationship may last. If the mate has other qualities that are appealing to the partner, thus childish behaviors overlooked in most instances makeup real love, unless the behaviors are harmful.

Thus to determine the direction a relationship is heading depends on one mates traits, outlook, et cetera. Conduct has won over many men down through the centuries, thus women from afar have gain the respect and love deserving of them while exercises self-control and long-suffering alone.

Men also need to exercise the mechanism built within our conscious mind or subconscious mind to make a relationship work. When two people work together, thus the relationship is obviously heading in a good direction.

Work, Love and Relationships

How does work affect love and relationships? Nowadays it takes an entire family to work together to make ends meet. When families work together, they produce a healthy relationship built on love. On the other hand, work can bring down a home. To learn more continue reading.

Work, work, work, that is all you seem to care about...one partner may say this to the other, since they are feeling left behind in the relationship. When work interferes with relationships the partner on trial needs to step back and ask him or her self, which direction am I heading? What is your purpose? Are you spending quality time with your family and partner? Does your mate take second seat to your work? What is most important to you?

When you take the time to analyze the situation you are proving loyalty to your relationship, since you are considering your mates feelings and needs. As humans, we need to feel loved. Love includes the feeling of closeness and intimacy, thus is your partner feeling neglected by reason that you are not providing love or the elements humans require feeling loved?

Intimacy is deeper than sexual gratification. When two people join in intimacy, the goal is to provide satisfaction to both the mind and body. Intimacy also means to share ideas, opinions, thoughts, emotions, et cetera together, which is part of satisfying the mind. Intimacy also includes sharing privacy in togetherness and personal expressions while joining in relationships.

What do you do when you are not working? Many women complain that when their mate arrives home from work they often set on the couch in front of the television after dinner and focuses on the screen. Thus, this is not considering, respecting or caring for your mate. Women, as men need love too, and love does not mean dishing out the need on your terms.

A true loving man will consider his wife or mate on all decisions made, unless the decision is out of her boundary. In other words, a man would not place the burden of helping him decide what to do in his workplace. First, the mate is not working your job, thus asking her advice will lead nowhere, unless she has related experience in the field of your expertise. Of course, talking of your job out of terms only instigates conversation, but is your entire conversing with your mate consisting of the history and problems of your work.

If you only converse about your work, how is it that you and your mate are sharing? The focus thus of your conversation is one-sided and the object is you. Keeping the chain of communication open can benefit any relationship. Shallow minds often find chaos throughout their life. Stereotyping is another problem that causes harm to relationships. Boisterous communication is a noisy turbulence that makes the listening party wonder why they bother to converse with you.

Complaining is another problem that breaks down relationships. This presents an open for communication since some people have the wrong view or misinterpretation of complaining. When a mate is addressing issues nicely and considering you while making the issues known, thus this is not a complaining action, rather it is a loving gesture. When a person is repeating, reciting, or constantly making the same complaint repeatedly, thus this is nagging that will only send the other mate to the roof.

When bringing issues to the front a mate will consider the person in question and this is visual in the following example.

Husband works long hours and rarely spends time with his family, thus the mate is feeling that the mates work is more important than their relationship. The wife instead of angrily handling the problem approaches her husband in a loving manner. She tells him once that there is a problem in the relationship and lets him know what the problem is, doing this calm, cool and collectively.

The husband considers her complaints and a few weeks go by without any effort on his part to react to her needs and feelings. The wife instead of bringing the subject up again continues her journey in life feeling alone. What do you think will be the result of this relationship?

Next, we will consider where entertainment and media come into play and how the force breaks down love and relationships.

Entertainment and Media Breaking Down Love and Relationships

Media will argue when writers or protestors stand up and state what harm entertainment and media causes in love and relationships. While the source can argue the evidence and patterns trailing behind us proves them liars.

Entertainment today enforces sexuality and violence while breaking down the rules of honesty, trust, faithfulness, loyalty, self-control, et cetera. Couples today sit in front of television for hours, or listen to all types of music for hours instead of joining in family activities. Children today consume their time playing video games, listening to harmful music, and engaging in viewing of harmful television programs. While the media says we all have our own choices, it is difficult to make good choices when you turn on the television and nudity, violence, profanity, and other inhumane activities are going on, on every station turned.

Nowadays, television is beyond open. Many people will use the term open mind to get their way. Open-minded people will not engage in harmful viewing, behaviors, actions, sound, et cetera, rather this types of minds will utilize the tools that prevent them harm.

When couples spend hours watching harmful movies, listening to painful sounds, or else engaging in hours of video play they are not taking the time to live, learn and love.

Entertainment enforces behavior. If the entertainment is good then good results will come of the activity, or engaging. On the other hand, if entertainment is bad then harm will result. It may not appear obvious at the onset, but over the course of the relationship, the traces of harm will creep in and out of the cracks.

Examples of harm caused by inappropriate entertainment, which lead to the breakdown in relationships is visual in the following illustration: *A young mother joined in a relationship after giving birth to another child. The woman's standards and belief was firm, while the husband's degree of humane stooped to the level of today's way of thinking. The mother traditional and submissive to the husband worked effortless to make the family arrangement work, while the children and husband joined in inhumane viewing and behaviors of entertainments. Overtime the children became aggressive and acting out of violence each time rules were set in the household. The father inconsiderate and lacking the ability to love rarely helped the mother with discipline and control of the children's behaviors, rather he enforced the wrongful conduct. Over time the woman after dishing out years of long-suffering, love, hope, et cetera fell into the charts of divorce when the husband committed adultery. The husband sold drugs, administered drugs, and solicited prostitution while encouraging the children to do the same. The children later appeared in court for criminal persecution, as well the husband landed in court facing charges against him. The family fell apart by divorce, lack of communication, inactive family participation, and harmful entertainment. While each family member came from broken homes, the mother had the wisdom (if only the others would listen) to make a productive relationship, while demonstrating true love.

As you can see, what you feed the mind comes out over time. The mind controls the body, including wellness, productivity, performance, et cetera. When the mind is fed garbage, it will gradually show in behaviors, case studies, patterns, habits, et cetera.

The term what you eat is who you, are, is not a joke. Rather it is a statement backed with evidence and truth. Likewise, what you put in the mind enforces what will come out over time. If you are spending hours on a couch watching movies, thus you are stating to your mate that the person is not interesting enough to move you to share time together. What is your mate doing that makes you feel this way? Sometimes a mate does nothing to enforce this negative reaction from the partner; rather it is their way of thinking, and their level of standards. When couples join to make love, they are joining to stand together through thickness and thin, better or worse, sickness and health until death says their love is no more. Listening to the stories of love and relationship can help us to appreciate true love and love that kills.

This scenario is hypo-theorized since the content requested in this article is in original nature, thus quoting is not permitted. However, the story is illustrated from a real-life experience.

A Story of Love and Relationship

Hearing the many stories of love and relationships, including the breakdowns make us wonder if love really exists anymore. The different stories including love that lead to harm, love that lead to death, and love that lead to hope tell us about the different types of love in existence.

When we think of the story of Bonnie and Clyde, we often wonder what bonded these two together. The couple remained faithful up until their death in relationship and love. Yet, their love was obviously misplaced. The love constructed on desire lead to death since the two joined in criminal activities that caused harm and death in the end of the relationship. The story of Bonnie and Clyde is a surefire example of compatibility, yet it illustrates the difference between unconditional love and superficial love, yet understands the mechanism that makes unconditional and dying love.

Both Bonnie and Clyde came from poverty-stricken homes. The two tired of bad relationships teamed up and acting out of violence to commit acts of vigilante at the same time the acts of crime. During their involvement, the two remained faithful and loyal to each other, and often illustrated the true meaning of love, since it took death to separate the two. While the two had the human mechanism originated to compose love, the two also had harmful intentions of the type of relationship they would join.

While Bonnie and Clyde relationships were a thing of the past, there are couples today that join in relationships with good intentions, but harmful habits and thinking that leads to disaster.

Examples of harmful relationships are visual in case studies abroad the world, captured in papers, media, et cetera. An example of a harmful relationship is visual in the following caption. It started out with the seemingly perfect relationship, which escalated to the seemingly perfect family. The traditional family composed of father, mother, and children. The father worked daily in a mental health environment, while the mother worked at home and outside the home. The father later murdered made the public wonder how such a seemingly perfect family arrangement turned sour.

It turned out that the father while appearing loving in the public was illustrating violence and abusive behaviors at home while keeping a low profile. Thus, the mother tired and feed up with the arrangement addressed the issue, which turned into a physical act of murder.

As you can see, human mechanisms and elements that compose love were lacking in this family, since obviously the man had no respect for his family arrangement, or members.

Unfortunately, not every book has a cover that exposes the trueness of the story. Likewise, every person does not always present the trueness of the person that helps the mate see the outlook of the relationship. A person can go through years with another individual and never detect flaws that could lead to harm, until the day arrives. Others leave trails that illustrate potential harm, but the partner consumed in life, and meeting expectations fail to see the traits and evidence trailing throughout the relationship.

When considering relationships it makes sense to take your time while monitoring closely to the different behaviors the mate presents. Monitoring and listening, while hearing can help you to determine what the person has to offer you. A background check could never hurt, since too many relationships today turn sour, or else the partner learns the hard way that the mate has a haunting past. The haunting past may include adulterous, promiscuous, or criminal behaviors.

Personally, I recommend joining in activities, entertainment, communication, et cetera before committing to a relationship. After a few months you will see how your potential mate responds to social engagements, social environment, and so forth. Still, once you have an overview of the person's response to your expectations you will need to take it slow before permanently committing self to an ongoing relationship.

You may want to learn the steps to protecting yourself from failed relationships, as well as how to maintain a productive relationship. Learning is growing and can help you make better choices in life, including in love and relationships. What are the general reasons for breakdowns in love and relationships?

General Reasons for Breakdown in Love and Relationships

Common causes that lead to divorce and/or separation include jealousy. Other problems such as abuse, bigamy, adultery, guilt, abandonment, imprisonment, conflicting beliefs, inconsideration, disrespect, and lack of commitment in general.

Jealousy comes in two forms. One form is harmful while the other form is legit. Jealousy delivered in disposition of attitude and/or feelings often cause harm, while zealous forms of jealousy enforce love. Zealous is a watchfulness eye that looks out for the loved one. Zealous mates will work hard to make sure harmful objects or persons are not in the way of true love. Zealous persons will labor throughout the relationship to deliver and fulfill needs to their mate.

Jealousy acted out on hurt emotions can, only further the problem. If a man has a wandering eye, of course this is wrong, since it is showing disregard and lack of respect to the mate. The action also tells the mate that if someone else came along the man may stray. The action further tells the mate that lust is the partners may focus, thus elements of love that make the relationship firm are non-existing, or lacking.

Of course, the mate may feel jealous and with good cause, but allowing the emotions to override thought will only enforce the inappropriate behaviors of the partner.

Inappropriate habits and behaviors, which include careless viewing of programs, or careless consideration in choices overall can increase jealousy, since the emotions become triggered. If the partner has a habit of watching nude programs, pornography, or else reading materials of such content, he/she is lacking respect for the mate. Thus, obvious reason for jealousy exist (zealous) since the mate is wronged, thus the relationship will have problems.

When a person loves another person, the mate will hold the up most attention to the partner. A man that loves his wife will not be looking at other women with sexual eye, or else with intentions of spicing up the relationship. Rather, the man will take pleasure and enjoyment with his mate's makeup, and find pleasure, satisfaction and joy from the person. Women are not objects of sexuality, or entertainment, however women as well as men are objects, since both work with the other to breakdown relationships.

Thus, this type of relationship is a one-way street, since one partner is self-devoted, and focuses on lust, while the other partner is working alone to keep a relationship alive.

Abuse is another form of disrespect, inconsideration and an action that breaks down relationships. Love may exist on one end of the relationship, but at the other end hate lurks the chambers of the hurting souls. When a man and/or women strike their mate, especially a man, since physically he is stronger, thus, love is not evident. Women that abuse good men that will not hit a woman are poor excuses of women. Likewise, men that batter women are poor excuses of human beings. Men, are guided to love their mate as them self. When a man strikes his mate, the bible clearly states that any man treated his wife treacherous will meet the wrath of God. Thus, the hate inside these types of men has no room for love and commitment. These types are surefire illustrations of self-devotion and self-gratification.

When a mate commits an act of adultery or fornication with another individual outside of the relationship, thus the person is showing disregard and inconsideration to the partner in the relationship. When the mate continues the deceitful treatment against the mate by lying, thus over time the relationship will fail, since God has a way of making the light known to others.

When a person commits bigamy, adultery or fornication outside a relationship, thus the person is saying to the mate that you have no worth to me.

Thus, adultery or acts inappropriate in relationships often lead to guilt. Guilt is the number one force that will consume the mind and eat at it until someone snaps. When a person lives on good standards and beliefs, thus, it leaves little room for guilt therefore a relationship will stand.

Guilt Destroying Love and Relationships

When the mind allows guilt to take over, it will tear down relationships, especially if the partner fails to come to terms and agreement with self. To determine if your mind is full of guilt you must ask your self-questions. What did you do so wrong that would offend your partner that cannot be forgiving?

Guilt can break the mind down to the point of no return. Guilt is more than a mistake made; rather it is a violation against rights, humanity, belief, tradition, standards, and love.

When a person fails in a relationship, they may feel a measure of guilt. Thus, confronting the problem now can remove the guilt and make the relationship work. When people confront their problems, it often leads to workable agreements. When procrastination, or else lying to cover the wrong continues the mind consumes itself with emotions based on guilt.

Guilt occurs when conscious actions or thoughts interfere with someone else's rights, or else against the own person's beliefs. Mistakes leading to guilt depend on the situation, but for the most part wrongs can lead to right if humanity exists.

If a person commits adultery, thus the problem is solvable if the person acted out of emotion, rather than thought and commits to restoring trust. Of course, actions, effort, behaviors and habits must show the mate that the mistake will never occur again. It depends on the mate but some will forgive, while others may take the insult of the partner letting them know their worth in the relationship to heart and may decide separation and/or divorce is the way out. Adultery is stating to the mate that you have no worth. If the mate decides to forgive, thus you must do your part and allow the guilt to turn into effort to restore trust. You will need consideration, loyalty, compassion, honesty, and may even need to tell your every move for a while during the course of restore. A person with true remorse will work hard, regardless of what he/she needs to do to restore trust.

If a person violates the right of the partner, thus, it depends on the magnitude of violation, but in most instances, it is workable. People act out of emotions and impulses at times, and will often act out of lust occasionally. When the emotions, impulses and desires take control (depending on the length of time control is enforced), the person may do things he or she ordinarily would not do.

Thus, adultery is a justifiable reason to divorce or separate from the spouse, but looking at the entirety of the circumstance can help a person decide. Was the spouse enticed by another individual to commit the act, while the spouse was feeling vulnerable? Still, vulnerability is no excuse on the spouse's part, but if enticement is the case, then two people wronged you. Was the other person in the act deceived? Did your mate lead the person to believe that he/she was not in a commitment?

Examining the entirety of the act can help the mate determine the direction the relationship is heading, and help the other partner decide what he/she needs to do to make things right again.

Divorce is an attack on the emotions, since a trigger hits the heart and emotions and creates pain, sorrow, hurt, sadness, et cetera. Divorce is showing a disregard for the marriage arrangement unless true reasons for divorce are evident. Thus, divorce should only be considered if the mate commits adultery, abuses the partner, or fails to commit in the relationship arrangement, and/or if death occurs.

If you are in a relationship and your mate committed an insulting act against you, such as adultery. Thus, considering the entirety will help you make a wise decision. If another person enticed your mate on vulnerable grounds, thus consider your partner by asking what were, you thinking at the time. If your mate responds by saying I wasn't thinking, thus you can ask, what makes me think it won't happen again? If your mate is sincerely sorry, he/she will let you know by words, action, emotions, thoughts, and tone spoken. Thus, forgiving is part of making love and relationship work.

Forgiving in Love and Relationships

Forgiveness is part of the tools needed in relationships to make love work. Forgiveness is letting your mate know that you realize they are human and will make mistakes.

When a person lacks the ability to forgive in relationships, it often causes problems along the way. Many relationships fall apart since one partner may say I forgive you, while showing behaviors that say otherwise. When a person forgives, they let go of the thinking that triggers the emotions repeatedly and continue their relationship without throwing the mistake up in the partners face later down the road.

Some people use mistakes as a tool to control the mate down the road. Thus, they will accumulate the mistakes and only use them when the moment arises to benefit the person. Thus, this is only adding fire to the flames already burning hot in the crevices of the minds emotions.

Accumulating mistakes to use as a weapon is not showing regard for the mate. Although the mate made a mistake, (depends on the mistake), it does not mean the mate does not have love for his/her partner.

Mistakes are a part of life, and when a person learns from their mistakes, it illustrates loyalty and commitment. Examples of mistakes made in relationship can help you to appreciate humanity and love.

Men often complain about their mates making them sleep on the couch, or denying them of intimacy because of mistakes made. Examine this idea closely and tell me what you see?

First, the mate is using sex as a weapon to control the mate. The mate is also going against the commitment in the relationship. What can a person possibly do so wrong that makes the mate say you are sleeping on the couch tonight, or else you are not getting it tonight? Did the mate commit adultery? If so, thus sleeping on the couch or denying the partner of sex is appropriate. Did the mate abuse the partner, by striking at the person physically? If so, getting out of the relationship is smarter than denying. Did the mate come home and slouch in front of the television again without regarding the partner?

Now we can review and examining the situation to determine if denying is appropriate. If your mate comes home each day and slouches in front of the television, thus denying is not the solution to fix the problem. Rather, someone must open the channels of communication to find a solution and resolve the problem. Willingness, consideration, openness, and other elements are essential on both parties' behalf to work through this situation. Denying the partner, will only lead to bigger problems down the road? If the partner feels neglected, or denied ongoing, thus eventually the human needs to feel needed, wanted and fulfilled will escalate to possible relations outside of the relationship.

The partner may fail to see that he/she too were neglectful in the relationship and act out of emotions, thus committing the ultimate sin that issues divorce.

Although this happens in relationships, some fail even though one party never denies the mate, and works hard to uphold their commitment to the partner. Some mates commit adultery, since the ultimate reason for relationship is wanton, or desire. If the soul mate is upholding their commitment and the partner commits adultery, thus the person may have reasons in mind, or behaviors and habit that lead up to the act.

If the partner is viewing, have inappropriate materials, or other influences sparking the emotions and thoughts, thus the person more likely than not will slip along the path of love. When a person feeds the mind garbage, thus garbage will come out along the path, regardless of the person's way of life. Almost any incident when a person fed the mind with garbage, thus the person slipped along the way. The person will violate the beliefs, traditions, standards, and commitment of others for selfish gain, thus telling the mate you mean nothing to me.

If you are considering love and relationship, you may want to take the time to ask your self what you expect from a relationship, and what you will not tolerate in a relationship. The little things that breakdown love and relationship are materialistic and should never interfere.

Little Things that Breakdown Love and Relationships

The little things that breakdown love and relationships make us wonder if love exists, and if relationships will stand without tumbling under every mistake made throughout the term of the relationship.

Throughout the years, men and women alike complain about their mates. Men often complain about their mate getting on their backs for leaving the toilet seat up.

First, I am not writing this article to uplift men or women, rather I am writing the article to help you see where little things lead.

Let us think about this situation. Women, if you want to complain about your mate leaving the toilet seat up, you may want to consider..."when you use the bathroom what is on your mind? Do you put the seat up when you leave the room? Is the toilet (material) worth causing problems in a relationship? Is your mate really showing you inconsideration, and if so, what consideration are you showing him when you leave the toilet seat down."

Women often complain that their mate is sloppy. Women complain that their mate never picks up behind them self, or else tosses their clothes around the room. Again, examining this situation carefully can help you to come to terms of agreement. If your mate is tossing clothes about the room, or else failing to pick up behind him self...do you work at home taking care of the children and home and do not have a career outside of the home? Of course, homemaking is one of the hardest careers, since consideration, self-control, and long-suffering must continue throughout the process of raising children, but what does your husband do? Is he a construction worker? If you do not have an extra job outside of the home, consider that your husband lifted heavy equipment each day to provide necessities for the family and that he works throughout the day tolerating various personality types, while receiving commands throughout the day. Is the material problem worth risking your relationship, since complaining about the little things will only escalate to bigger things?

Men, if your mate is working two jobs with one taking care of you and your children, you may want to show some consideration and respect.

Men often complain that women gossip. While study human behaviors I noted this to be true for both men and women. Men gossip also, but you rarely hear the women complain about this behavior, thus the world has only heard the complaints coming from men. Gossip is harmful. Thus, all of us are encouraged to avoid gossiping. Gossip is also a waste of valuable and precious time. To those men complaining that the mate gossips too much, step back and look at your history of communicating with others to see if, you are not a hypocrite before telling your mate to tone it down.

There is nothing wrong with confronting your mate when bad habits interfere with the relationship. If you mate truly loves you the mate will tone it down, or get rid of the object causing the problem. Little things grow if communication fails to step in between and open up minds to stop or slow the problem adding harm to the relationship.

When couples bicker and fight over little things they are wasting precious time and destroying love. If a person has a problem with their mate's behaviors, habits, or personality, thus addressing it now is far better than letting it ride.

Example: You never pick up behind your self: Response: And you are always complaining. I see two immature people hear adding fuel to the flames.

Honey, I feel unappreciated when you toss your clothes around and fail to pick up behind yourself. Response: honey I was tired, but I promise I will work on my habits in the future. I see two individuals showing maturity and consideration and an outlook for a positive relationship.

Example: I am tired of you leaving the toilet seat up when you use the bathroom. Response: I am tired of you telling me what I am not doing.

Wife: my husband leaves the toilet seat up...so what, I leave the toilet seat down when I use the bathroom.

Thus, confusion in love and relationship only escalates to hate.

Confused in Love and Relationships

When couples feel confused in love and relationships, something is missing that brings forth that confusion. When you feel confused in love and relationship, it is time to step back and analyze the situation.

To help you start an analysis on your relationship we can consider possible questions to keep in mind. Is your partner fulfilling his/her part in the relationship? What are you doing in the relationship that may cause the confusion? Is your partner exercises effective communication when decision problems, decisions, et cetera, or is your partner leaving it up in the air, or else avoiding conversation?

If communication is lacking, thus confusion will creep in the door, since the partner will often feel confused as to what the other partner needs. If you are not talking, how do you expect to work through problems, or else learn each other's needs and wants. Failure to communicate will only lead to confusion and later lead to much-complicated problems, including divorce.

Divorce is an act committed out of love. When accumulation of frustration and confusion leads to divorce one partner is telling the other, I do not love you and never have I loved you.

Sure, divorced parties learn that they did love the other partner later, but at this time, it is too late. If the divorce stemmed from adultery, abuse, or severe neglect, thus clearness of love is not evident, since the divorcing party has the right to leave the relationship.

True love is evident when couples exercise long-suffering, self-control, and patients throughout the relationship. When couples respect each other, communicate, illustrate openness without harmful thoughts, trust, and remain honest in a relationship, true love is evident. The couple realize that human beings make mistakes, thus will willing forgive and let it go when mistake are made in the relationship.

Of course, true love does not mean that a person has to forgive the other if the partner commits adultery, or else abuses the partner. Adultery is the same as battery in nature, since when a person commits adultery they are insulting and slapping their partner. While physical abuse differs, since physical and mental harm was delivered to the partner, and adultery is mental harm, but still it equivocates.

Adultery can also lead to physical harm. If a partner sleeps with another person outside the relationship, thus the partner is potentially capable of receiving transmitted diseases. While condoms present a measure of protection, it has been proven in case studies that condoms will not stop the ongoing problem of disease. People have slept with individuals while wearing condoms and later learnt they had obtained a transmitted disease.

Thus, adulterous relationships only lead to confusion, since the emotions are in constant trigger mode. The emotions is where it is at, since when the emotions are attacked a person will either demonstrate self-control by thinking through the situation, or else strike out of hurt.

Now you know where arguments come in, in relationships. Emotions is the root to all problems, yet triggers are the source of the roots. When the emotions feel threatened, they act out either emotionally or thoughtfully. Thus, emotional triggers, including the root of the emotional stimuli confusion upsurges.

Relationships should start with friendship, however rarely couples join in relationships after enduring a friendship. Some loves start from graduate, while other loves start later in life.

Before you let, the confusion take over your mind, you may want to assess your situation closely. Thus, assessing the situation will help you see what is needed in the relationship to clear the confusion.

If there is lack of communication in the relationship, reeve up those engines and take the front to start a relationship. A wise person will approach the mate and open a conversation on friendly grounds by leaving out accusations, which is a trigger to the emotion.

Example: honey, I feel something is missing in our relationship and lately I've been feeling confused. If the mate comes back with a negative response, instead of striking back, calmly excuse your self and say, maybe another time for talking is more appropriate. If you act out on your emotions, which were triggered in the scene, thus you are only throwing fuel on a burning fire.

Next, we can look at long distant love and relationships, or affairs through single ads.

Long Distance Relationship and Love Affair Singles Ad

I placed an ad in the local papers, only to see if I would get a response. I was not lonely, or desperately seeking a man. In fact, I was embarrassed, but I wanted to see if the program worked. I was astonished when I received hundreds of response to my ad. As I listened to the various voices in the mailbox, I stumbled upon one voice that I knew I must answer. After we spoke on the telephone, I knew I must remove my ad from the Single's Columns. I knew the man at the other end of the line was the man for me the moment we spoke on the phone. After talking about six months on the phone, we both decided it was time for us to meet. In my small rural town, I never thought I would find romance. Instead, I found love, romance, and ecstasy. The night we met the man took me to his mother's apartment where he was staying at the time until he accumulated enough money to buy his own house, in which he did so three-years later.

That first night as I looked into his dark eyes, and listened as he spoke in the sexiest tone and softest voice I had ever heard, I knew I wanted him. At his mother's house we talked, shared feelings, and thoughts repeatedly through the night. He rolled out the hide-a-way couch and said to me, "I would love to lie next to you and hold you, but I respect you as a lady."

Oh, how I would have liked to, not be a lady that night...I was so-into him. His voice was magnetizing. The next day he took me to Wal-Mart and bought me a new pair of hiking shoes. He said to me, "no woman of mine is going to walk around in old, worn out shoes."

I was not much into new, only into the comfortable luxuries. Yet, I accepted his offer and felt a sense of compassion and embarrassment as a result. No one really cared whether my needs were fulfilled before this man came into my life.

As I drove away this day, I longed for the moment that we would meet again. That day came the follow week. Shockingly, he rented a hotel room and asked me if he should get his own room? "No, I said." I knew we would be together that night.

As we sat and talked about various topics, he left to go to the store to buy drinks. We sat drinking; talking, and finally he put his hands on me. His hands touched me in a way I had never been touched before and longed to be touched in that way again.

The night lasted, but ended quickly. From that time forward, we talked on the phone, met in hotels, and shared pictures across the Internet. Since 1993, I have never regretted placing my ad in the Single's Columns and if I had to do it again, I most certainly would.

Even when I had moved from that small, rural town, his memory followed, sparking me to call him on the phone. Today we still love each other and it does not look like anything is about to change, yet our relationship is a long-distant love.

The many stories of love and relationships developed through single ads rarely end as this story did. Some people look for love and relationships in various places including abroad the Internet or through Single Ads. Some relationships work out, but more than not have fallen into a web of hurt and despair.

While this person in the example shows the elements that compose a strong relationship, the tools that make it last are non-existing. Thus, the woman continues to communicate with the man over the phone and Internet, yet she rarely sees him, since he is consumed in work and working through his relationship with his children. Thus, will anything become of this relationship? The answer is left standing in the cracks of the two and how much lacking in their relationship each can take.

Next, we can look at mothers in love and relationships to determine true love.

Mothers in Love and Relationships

Mothers have separate relationships with the mate and children. To learn if true love exists in a family we must analyze children, moths, fathers and devotion.

Mothers devote their life to taking care of and teaching their children. Thus, the mother is devoting her life to her husband, since the children belong to him. Still, some mothers will kill, die, or commit other acts out of love for their children, but will restrain when the husband prompts the need to feel protected.

Mothers may protect the father against other women that pose threats to the relationship, but sometimes mother will remain passive when family members or friends pose threats to the relationship.

Mothers will go to great lengths to protect and feed their children, while few mothers will do little to nourish and protect their husband.

When a mother dishes out equal measurements to both spouse and children, thus the mother is illustrating true love. Of course, any mother in her right frame of mind will protect the children against the father if the man is demonstrating harmful acts against the children, but overall a mother will dish out equal love to all family members.

Likewise, a good man will dish out equal love in a relationship with children involved. A man will put food on the table, maintain a healthy lifestyle and uphold his commitment in love.

Few mothers have gone above and beyond to keep a relationship in tact, while neglecting their children in the meantime. Thus, true love is lacking, since true love never neglects, harm, or abuses.

If a partner is demonstrated abuse or neglect, thus the partner has harmful intents and selfish desires.

How can you tell if your mate loves you? You can tell how when your partner combines long-suffering, self-control, patients, and care throughout the relationship. Sure, we all get mad, or else feel frustrated from time to time, but for the most part your mate will illustrate these behaviors without cease.

A person can tell when their mate loves them when they trust the mate that has illustrated that he/she is trustworthy, or else earned the trust. The partner will remain faithful, loyal, and devoted to their family throughout the relationship. True love adheres to the best intentions of the entire family, rather than consumes their mind and time getting what they want.

Mothers from of old have proven faithful in commitment, far more so than men, yet mothers too can lack the humane mechanisms that compose true love...

Sometimes people change during the course of life. People changing is common, however when dramatic changes occur, or else the change of mind in the relationship takes place, thus we can see the person did not have connections with the self when committing to the relationship. In other words, the person did not have an idea of the type of person they were when engaging in the relationship.

Sometimes changes occur when the other partner is lacking the tools to fulfill commitments and needs of the mate. When a mate feels a sense of neglect and the feeling is ongoing, they may rethink their relationship and consider another direction.

Mothers that love their children more than the mate may have good reasons, or else they never had true love with the mate in the first place.

Families are instructed to join in activities regularly and to dine together. The concept of eating together is to provoke communication. When families lack communication problems are rarely resolved and resentment consumes the mind, until finally one or the other says, I have had enough.

Women created different from man still have similar needs and wants. Men need to fill closeness; likewise, women need the same feeling. Sure, some women need more than others do, but when you step into a relationship, you should have learnt this before the relationship started.

Commitment is a two-way street, thus the entire family must work to make love grow. Learning about each other can help you to find strategies in keeping the love alive. Are we friends or we in love and relationship?

Friends in Love and Relationships

Friends are a form of relationship built on different types of love. When man and woman joins in love and relationship, intimacy labors throughout the arrangement, however in friendship a different type of intimacy exists that makes the relationship work. Friendship, as intimate relationships work with the exception that sex is not in the arrangement in some instances. Some friends join in friendship and later commit to sexual relations, thus leading to commitment or else separation.

Friendships that are long lasting usually have the ingredients to make the relationship work. Friends may cause each other agitation, frustration, or unintentional harm down the road in the relationship, yet the two will work together to make it work by finding a resolve.

Friendship is a form of commitment between two or more people, and often friends join in activities, entertainment, and communication. True friends will prove true to the end of the relationship. Friends will not interfere with each other's life, unless the friend sees the need to address an issue that is causing the friend harm, or in the making of causing him/her harm.

True friends in love and relationships will not hold back any punches when addressing issues with friends. While the friend will not hold back any punches, he/she will use consideration of the person's feelings and emotions when addressing issues. Friends have your back, which is a symbol of love displayed on their part, and friends that endure throughout the trials and tribulations of the relationship, show love since long-suffering and self-control are visual.

Friends in love and relationship may fight at times, but both parties will apologize for his/her part that instigated the disagreement. Friends will tell you when you are wrong, thus again not holding back any punches, while considering you.

Friends that develop into intimate relationships, often work through the arrangement regardless of the storms laid on their plates. Friendship before intimacy is smart, since the two have an overview of the others behaviors, habits, personality, skills, et cetera.

Love and relationships built on true friendship will last through habits, behaviors, personality flaws, et cetera, providing violence or repeated actions of inconsideration and disrespect is ongoing.

When mates disrespect each other, or show inconsideration ongoing, thus, the relationship will fail, since friendship, love and elements that compose love are lacking.

Disrespect expands further than most people think. Thus, learning beliefs, traditions, and standards is smart when considering love and relationships. Thus, starting out as friends will help you see through the person's behaviors, habits and personality, what makes him or her up as a person. The makeup of the person will include an insight of standards, traditions, and beliefs.

Beliefs are tricky, since nowadays standards are lower than ever, thus beliefs are often overlying inconsistency and dishonesty. When a person has lack of evidence to support their beliefs, thus faulty thinking is underlying the mind.

Beliefs are either concrete or superficial. To convince me that a person is worth my time, the person better have some realness in light. Thus, superficial beliefs rarely stand firm, thus the person is obviously heading in the wrong direction, and thus the relationship may or may not last.

As you can see, what determines the outlook of friendship, love and relationships depends on the makeup of the persons involved?

What about compatibility, where does it play in friendship, love and relationships...

Compatibility by definition means to exist together in agreement. When two people join in agreement the relationship may or may not last, since down the road can you determine if one person's mind will change? People live life and gain experience and wisdom along the path, thus a shallow minded person might stumble upon information that changes his/her mind forever.

Thus, incompatibility according to definition means to cause a disturbance by inconvenience and distress. While the definition illustrates a failure down the road, many relationships built on incompatibility proved enduring, since down the road minds changed when facts were gathered leading to convictions.

Thus, conviction is devastating. When you have truth, you have conviction, thus no one can argue with you...therefore, relationships can last in friendship and in love and relationships. Yet, outside of relationship and in love makes room for disaster.

Outside of Relationship and In Love

When men or women commit to a relationship and one or the other steps out of the boundaries of the relationship, problems creep in and chaos leaves a trail of hurt.

Do you love your partner? What type of love do you share with your partner? Love comes in forms that mislead, or else guide couples through the path that stands firm regardless of the weathers in the path.

Relationships in the past were broken when one partner realized the mate was not what he/she needed. Thus, this is not true love, or else the partner is confused and lack of communication has drifted the two apart.

Relationships in the past were broken when one partner failed to consider the other mate and committed an act such as adultery. Thus, true love possibly existed on one partner's half, but on the other side it is evident true love was not there. The partner may love the mate, but the proof that trust is reachable in the relationship is gone.

Relationships in the past failed when the partners split to follow their dreams. Thus, an example of this type of relationship is necessary, since love is underdetermined.

A couple set out on a journey while searching for love. The two meet along the path of life and joined in relationship, until one day the mate tells the other partner that her dreams require separation. The two agree to meet on occasions, but for the man it is not enough, since he engages in materials that lead to harmful behaviors. The man engages in the reading of pornographic materials, thus we can see that devotion, loyalty, trust, faithfulness and other elements of love do not exist, since history has proven time again that this type of behaviors lead to harm, pain and suffering.

Can the man change? Yes. Does he love the mate? Possibly, but he has not accumulated the mechanisms that define true love. Therefore, would I take a chance on such a man, probably not, but it can happen that he will change along his journey in life.

The woman is of youth, thus starting her life at this point. She feels sad that she must leave the man, but lets him know that she is there, only a distance apart. Again, the man lacks the elements that define true love, since his behaviors will lead him to be unfaithful. Again, history has proven this logic, and to back it, we can consider the source.

Thus, dreams split relationships, but if the man had, the tools that define true love the woman may have changed her direction in life. When a person feels confident about their relationship, they will alter their dreams to meet the expectations of commitment.

For example, one of my dreams is to live on a mountaintop in a log cabin and away from the populace. However, if I meet my true love in life and he has a job, thus, I will redirect my dreams to uphold love, commitment and relationship. On the other hand, if the man shows signs of harmful intentions, and lustful desire I am going for my dreams and he can take a hike.

Some people start up relationships out of desire. Once the relationship progresses and one tires of the other, they often drift worlds apart. These types of relationships are hurtful and selfish and only bring down the outlook of love and relationship. When a person has desire in focus while starting a relationship, it is almost guaranteed there will be other relationships outside of the relationship, and the other person will hurt since they are in love alone.

A trail of broken hearts follows behind these types of relationships. Thus, knowing who you are is the start that determines if you will find true love and relationship. If you are in contact with your emotions, personality, beliefs, standards, and so forth, thus you can touch the fine lines of love and relationship while remaining in love and in the relationship. Thus, lust, love and relationship has a separation that needs defined to make love last.

Love, Lust and Relationships

Love is non-existing when lust consumes the mind. When two people join in love and relationships and one or both parties are acting out of lust the relationship is sure to fail, unless the two cultivate the tools required to make love last.

Lust is a conscious reaction to emotions triggered by appealing appetizers, and backed with impulses. Lust throughout the years has proven harmful, especially if the action acted out on lust has gain in mind, which focuses on sexual pleasures.

The media, including television, radio, video, et cetera places a lot of emphasis on sexuality and sex. Both women and men are to blame since women permits the media to exploit them sexually, while men watch without considering whom they hurt.

Our history of serial killers alone should bring forth wisdom, insight and intelligence, however it does nothing more but produce more of the wrongful and lustful content and sound.

Child molesters, serial killers, rapist, and other types of criminals often include a history of viewing, listening, or acting on materials provided to them by publishers and producers. While many people excuse the materials, sound and pictures, by claiming only a sick mind can act out this way, they are far from seeing the truth that this type of production only seeps in the mind, thus leaking out over time.

Some of the well-respected people throughout life behaved silently leading people to believe the person is honorable, but later the ceiling dropped when the respected soul committed a hideous crime. The studies showed that these individuals also engaged in pornographic materials, including frequenting strip clubs, and engaging in illicit sexual acts.

Lust has lead to murder, rape, robbery, thief, child molestation, and other hideous crimes, yet the world continues to excuse the ultimate reason that these problems occur.

From the beginning of time acts illustrating Sodom and Gomorrah...Sodom and Gomorrah was a city composed of lustful characters. God brought down the corrupted city, and only few members escaped. In the city acts of murder, fornication, adultery, sexual exploitation, violence, and other harmful acts were rituals.

Relationships built on lust often fail, unless both parties find intelligence, humanity, wisdom, and the courage to work through trials and tribulations together.

Nowadays, few people remain steadfast in love and relationships, while considering love in the context delivered from originality. Religion, politics, unfaithfulness, lust, and other influences often join man and woman together, yet still relationships fail.

Why do the relationships fail? The reason various, but for the most part, lies, disloyalty, deceit, inhumane behaviors and habits, philosophy, theories, opinions, and lack of effort can bring down any relationship.

To understand true love we can visualize an example where one woman survived through adultery, violence, disrespect, lies, inconsideration, mental illness, and other harmful acts committed against her. Now, one would think this woman would get out and leave her troubles behind, but the woman proved her humanity and acted out on those elements that compose love, at the same time a reason stood behind it all. The woman tolerated this behavior committed against her partially because in those days, divorce was unheard of and the woman co-dependant and dependant lacked the skills to stand alone in the world.

The woman submissive to her mate tolerated and lived through a world of hell, but at the same time she illustrated long-suffering, self-control, patients, loyalty, faithfulness, and other elements to make the relationship work until death did them apart.

The woman stood beside her man, yet not once in the relationship did he consider her needs, feelings, et cetera. At the end of the relationship she dished out to him a few of the behaviors and actions he committed against her, yet she could never issue him the harm he caused her. The man is a poor example of a human being, let alone an example of a mate in love and relationship. Thus, the woman shows examples, since long-suffering and other elements that compose; love obviously was evident in her history and behaviors.

Resentment leading to Disaster in Love and Relationships

The traditions and laws of love are ever altering. Thus, the original foundation is sent toward another direction while millions join in love and relationships, which lead to disaster. When a person accumulates resentment toward a mate and failure to communicate lurks throughout the arrangement, somewhere, somehow, someone is going to get hurt.

When people are given the wrong impression about love and relationships, they will often accumulate resentment through the course of the arrangement. Some people are able to work through their relationship, while others say to heck with it and move on.

The people capable of working through the problems show true commitment, while the people saying to heck with it are committed to self. Relationships and love are often complicated, since many personality, behaviors, habits, and other mechanisms are in the way of the studying process.

Thus, understanding personality, behaviors, habits, and other traits can help a person to decide if a relationship is right. The understanding can also help a person decide which direction the relationship is heading.

If a person is constantly irritating you with habits, thus committing to a relationship is illogical, since resentment will override the relationship later and failure will occur. If you are able to talk with your partner and communicate about the irritating habits, and he/she is willing to change the habits, or readjust, thus the relationship holds potential. However, what is the motive of change? Is the partner changing his ways because he loves you? Is the partner changing temporarily until a snare is set and then intends to go back to the habits that irritated you in the first place? Is the partner's habit so annoying since they are habits that can lead to harm?

There are scores of questions to consider when starting a relationship. A number of the widespread causes for divorce are envy, desertion, violence, bigamy, incarceration, accusing, blame or guilt, infidelity, and contradictory point of views; diminishing fulfillment of sexual, mental, and emotional satisfaction can breakdown relationships since resentment is accumulated to an overload level.

Probing the causes can help us see that the many reasons that breakdown relationships are either genuine or not. Thus, bigamy is publicly unconstitutional, act, as adultery is telling a person that their worth is non-existing. Infidelity is a legally recognized ground for divorce, but for the most part.

Other causes of divorce or separation include abuse. When a partner strikes out violently toward the mate, thus, love is obviously lacking and over time, resentment will burn into outright hate and anger. The history tells us of the many relationships that were violent and shows the result, which includes murder.

God forbid, but if a man batters a woman ongoing without cease and little help is available somewhere down the road a way out is required for the victim to last. Thus, women have killed men that battered them ongoing throughout a relationship, and often when they asked for help, society and the law turned the other cheek. Thus, I condone this act of self-defense; however, I recommend that a person evaluate a person thoroughly before moving in together or joining in commitments.

Often these types of relationship start out with pressure. The perpetrator often is skilled in manipulation and effective in pressuring someone into doing what they want. It is virtually without a solution for offensive partners to change their behaviors, since these types have the ultimate mental health problem and that is flawed personalities.

Thus, resentment can escalate in some instances to outright anger, which causes harm. When a person acts out of anger, their emotions are upsurge and thus, thinking is removed from the scene.

The traditions and laws of love are ever altering. Thus, the original foundation is sent toward another direction while millions join in love and relationships, which lead to disaster. When a person accumulates resentment toward a mate and failure to communicate lurks throughout the arrangement, somewhere, somehow, someone is going to get hurt. Thus, the ultimate relationship is loss of love and failure in relationships on the rising. Thus, sources outside of the relationship can also interrupt love and relationships.

Sources Interrupting Love and Relationships

Evils contained by marriages over and over again are created from outside interferences. For instance, civilization, political groups, teaching, and religion all labor collectively to propel the marriage agreement, sending it into confusion and chaos. Relations at present have lost view of traditional teachings and the definition of love. Many relationships in the present day make use of sex, using it as an instrument work through the relationship, or else to control the arrangement.

Love and relationships at present often turn out to be a short-lived business rather than a lasting promise between two mutual individuals. Scores of tools to breakdown marriages in the present day are developed, thus any reason is enough to say I am leaving you. Kin members, acquaintances, and other outside sources are swift to persuade split-up, rather than enforcing the two to work out their problems. Influences are manipulated skills that people use to either harm or help others.

Thus, the foundation for a building a good marriage, or else love and relationship is learning to build on solid grounds. Scores of folks think that sexuality previous to marriage gets rid of doubts. People join in sexual relations before committing sometimes to see if the person is capable of satisfying the partner's needs.

Thus, the sources of interruption should be weeded through, since if you love someone no force will tear the relationship down. True love will battle if outside forces move in attempting to destroy the relationship.

Associates often move in on relationships, thus tearing down the arrangement. Men and women alike have destroyed relationships throughout the years by encouraging one partner to join them in activities that depict a lack of respect for a relationship. Thus, friends encouraging a true love to join in a gather at a strip joint will clearly state, I love my mate, talk later.

Family members have destroyed love and relationships. When a family member does not accept the mate, they may go to lengths to convince the partner that love does not exist in the relationship. Thus, true love will tell the family members to mind their own business and let me handle my own love and relationship. Of course, if family members have the best of intentions for the partner in mind, thus possibly seeing habits and behaviors that are disturbing and the partner is not seeing these traits, thus consideration is essential.

Family is a form of relationship. Thus, true love exists when families allow their children room to live their own life. True love is evident when families, friends, and mates work productively together to make the relationship last.

Women, men, children, family members, friends, and other influences of the world have their lot in life and should be placed appropriately in their place when working to maintain love and produce a long-lasting relationship.

Thus, true love will never step over its boundaries. Therefore, politicians are not your friends. Some religions are not your friends, and definitely, other influences that work to destroy relationships are not your friends.

People out for their own interest lack the mechanisms that makes love grow. Thus, self-interest often includes lust, desire, hate, envy, deceit, lies, disrespect, and other harmful ingredients that makeup the person's true identity. The identity may not expose itself now, but as time goes by, the person will show his true colors, unless he sees his mistakes along the path of life and changes his course.

On the other hand, true love is found when people butt out, and give you advise that will only work to help you, rather than cause you harm. True advice is defined as evidence, facts, trails of productivity, experience, wisdom, intelligence et cetera. If a person provides you advice, can this person back up his/her statements, recommendations, words, et cetera? If not then you might want to carefully weigh out the advice to see which direction you need to go while thanking the person for the advice as you trail off into analysis, debate, thought, et cetera.

Now we can review the extracts from love and relationships.

Extracts of Love and Relationships

Several persons begin relationships out of desire, which is the opposite of aspiration. Once the relationship progresses and one tires of the other, they often drift worlds apart. These types of relationships are often harmful; since selfish motivation sparks, the relationship and thus the result only bring down the outlook of love and relationship. When a person has desire in mind while starting a relationship, it is almost guaranteed there will be other relationships outside of the relationship, and the other person will hurt since they are in love alone.

A trail of broken hearts follows behind these types of relationships. Thus, knowing who you are is the start that determines if you will find true love and relationship. If you are in contact with your emotions, personality, beliefs, standards, and so forth, thus you can touch the fine lines of love and relationship while remaining in love and in the relationship. Thus, lust, love and relationship have a separation that needs defined to make love last.

Desires are a mindful response to emotions triggered by appealing appetizers, and backed with impulses. Lust throughout the years has proven harmful, especially if the action acted out on lust has gain in mind, which focuses on sexual pleasures.

Nowadays, few people remain steadfast in love and relationships, while considering love in the context delivered from originality. Religion, politics, unfaithfulness, lust, and other influences often join man and woman together, yet still relationships fail.

Love behind the years has confirmed that respect, consideration and other elements of love are non-existing, and thus relationships often fail. When two people join in relationships and love they must adhere to the advice provided to them by the Law of God and not man. When couples step on boundaries and disregard true advice they often find them self-heading down the path to divorce and/or separation, thus, finding true love takes skill, patients, long-suffering, and other human mechanisms to make love last.

A good relationship is based on trust, love, and faith, self-control and sharing. When one partner is giving more than the other partner this is not love. When one partner trusts that his or her partner is faithful and the partner is out spreading it around like the plague then someone is going to get hurt.

Thus, in the present day of love and relationships, hurt often consumes relationships, thus divorce and/or separation result. Some relationships can withstand the weathers with one partner working, but all relationships take two to make it last. Thus, some men have a history of proving unfaithful, dishonest, deceitful, et cetera. At one time women were never heard of committing such acts as adultery, murder, or abusing the mate. Thus, nowadays women fed up with the ways many men have demonstrated throughout history, including engaging in adulterous affairs, and inappropriate materials, thus nowadays women are making a statement by acting out the same.

Women at one time worked at home raising the children and taking care of the household. Often the man would work, bringing home the bread and rarely did you hear reports of divorce or separation. Still they existed, but at present divorces and separation is an ongoing issue in society.

Nowadays, it is next to impossible to find pure love. Good men often find women that treat them ill, while bad men are mistreating women badly that their views of men diminish over time. Good women often find men that cheat, lie, or take them for granted, thus finding a good relationship nowadays is next to impossible.

Likewise, women at present are taking a stand, thus showing that low tolerance is in the making. The one surefire element that composes true love is long-suffering, thus men and women alike nowadays lack the ability to illustrate this ingredient that makes up love.

Different relationships in the world boil down to good or bad relationships. When two people join in intimate relations, both parties must work hard to make the relationship work. A bad relationship will utilize tools believing that the mechanisms will keep the spice in his or her life when they feel tired out of the mate. In other words, a bad relationship focuses on sexual gratification, which never occurs, since he or she tires out quickly. The person may engage in pornographic reading or viewing, promiscuous relationships, violence, and so forth to gratify the desire.

Conclusion:

Love and relationships at present is a touchy topic, since love and relationships is revolving in a direction where disaster often ends the path.
